One small class for the school and one giant pep rally win for the class of '84. Seniors armed with kazoos strive to produce more noise than the other classes. During this pep rally the class reached its goal, winning the spirit football for the first time in their four years. The size of the class of '84, labeled the smallest in the school's history, contributed to the reduced numbers in the total school enrollment.

Blast 'em. Band members entertain students Friday morning to get everyone psyched for the upcoming football game. Although small in size, the band had a big sound as it won Second Place Grand Champions at the competition in North Carolina.

Scheduling advice. During the Curriculum Fair senior Robbie Rose points out a possible science elective for freshman Travis Sherry. Despite the decreased enrollment, the curriculum continued to suit individual requirements.

Allow me to present. Principal Mr. Tom Stavredes introduces foreign exchange student Marco Piekert as Lars Godzik and Mayumi Takaya await their turn. Although the school population decreased these three still became intimidated by the overwhelming noise of the crowd during a fall pep rally.

Small talk

Small ('smöl) adj. — having comparatively little size or slight dimensions. Comparisons always exist whether contrasting tall with short, dark with light, coarse with soft and of course big with small. Reduction in the size of the student body led people to become increasingly aware of changes all over the campus, forcing administrators, parents and yearbook staff members to classify the school as small.

A gradual decline in the overall school enrollment occurred over a four year period, beginning with the opening of Godwin High School in 1980 and culminating with the Class of '84, the smallest in the school's history. School population changed from an all-time high of 2532 students in 1968 to 1355 in September of 1983.

Upon close examination, the size difference emerged as a factor in the school's operation. Within the past three years the faculty decreased by 20 to 25 members. Administrators found it possible to follow up on behavior, attendance and scheduling problems due to the fact that they were each responsible for fewer students.

Not only related to the more academic side of school, the size affected extracurricular activities also. Membership reflected the overall reduction while clubs such as Hi-Y and the Driving and Safety Club ceased to exist because of lack of prospective members. Even so, the diversity of campus organizations accommodated the wide range of student interests.

Fun in the sun. Freed from the pressures of school, freshmen Mary Matthews and Lisa Haskins and sophomore Amy Haskins find plenty of free time to spend at the pool. Warm weather offered an abundance of spare hours, filled with jokes, gossip and small talk.

Guard duty. Senior Micah Eiler monitors the front gate while working at Hungary Creek swimming pool. Micah greeted and talked with members who visited the pool, enabling him to keep in touch with friends over the summer.

Gimme a break. Lunch time provides relief from the monotony of classes for juniors Cindy Ray, Angie Picha and Cindy Noblett. A single lunch period gave students the opportunity to relax and socialize with whomever they wanted.

Talk it up. Penny Dorset, Kevin Steele, Sam Overstreet, Stacey Cropp and Kelley Duncan congregate around Building 10 during lunch while the weather remains warm. The wide area that the steps covered allowed plenty of space for groups to talk and laugh while still allowing room for those who needed to study.

Small talk

Students found that having fewer people on campus revealed hidden benefits. In previous years, the popularity of Building 10 led to overcrowded conditions between classes and especially during lunch. Less students meant a reduction in the confusion in the hallways, making the transition to a new school less intimidating for freshmen and transfers. Commotion also decreased in the cafeterias. Lunch lines did not seem as long and students found it easier to locate a seat.

Despite the diminished school population, class offerings continued to fill the needs of all involved. The curriculum included additional advanced placement and honors courses, such as AP Biology and U.S. History. The development of the Individualized Instructional Program aided ninth graders in gaining better study habits and reading skills.

Whether emphasizing academics or extra-curricular activities, students discovered an appropriate outlet for their talents. A smaller student body did not prevent individuals from growing to reach their full pontential.

As the academic portion of the day ended, students focused their attention on extracurricular activities. They pushed their books aside to direct their energy toward clubs, dances, plays or sports, the best part of

Student life

Knowing that dynamite comes in small packages, excited Tigers exploded at the first Pep Rally. Although the number of students decreased compared to previous years, the rivalry between classes still demonstrated their patriotic spirit. Cheers of "orange" and "blue," led by Coach Chic Shinault, sparked the rowdy crowd to feel optimistic about the upcoming year.

The reduction in the size of the student body meant that individuals worked harder to accomplish their club's tasks. The complexity of the coordination and production of the Variety Show drew in seniors who previously had not contributed to the class' undertakings. The musical Barnum also attracted newcomers to the drama department.

Fewer students on campus to coordinate the events did not stop the Tigers from going for the gold. Instead they toughened their standards of excellence and put forth the extra effort needed to succeed.

Reflecting individual personalities, shorter and smaller became better. Daring haircuts displayed a vivid contrast in length on both males and females. Also, mini-skirts maintained their popularity, especially when coordinated with layered shirts to accentuate the difference in lengths.

Adjusting to the new dimensions took time for some, but most managed to work together to minimize any obstacles. This challenge reminded students to emphasize quality, not quantity.

Toga, toga. Hysterically laughing at teachers getting wrapped in tissue paper, Junior Jessie Whitten points out the horrible expressions on the faculty members' faces as they are covered with toilet paper. Kelly Marrin and Susan James, both members of the Junior Class, share in the joke and cheer on the class representatives. Antics like this amused even the most straight-laced student who could not keep from joining in the fun.

Hustle: Onlookers encourage the boys' cross-country team across the finish line. Even with a smaller number of students enrolled at school, at least 50 guys ran for the team which finished thirteenth in the state.

Get me a coke. Although the lines seemed shorter, students still asked others to buy their food. Instead of spending time waiting, they chatted with their friends or finished homework during lunchtime.

Pregame warm-up. Pedaling down the street, freshman Robby Ettinger and his dog Foxy Lady kill some extra time before his baseball game. Tuckahoe Little League offered summertime recreation for ages 5 through 16.

Hard at work. Freshmen Shari Bernstein, Tracy Stevens and Jennifer Sperberg find just the right music to sun by. Students who belonged to pools spent summer months working on improving their tans.

Flashback

Patriotic crowds packed the sidewalks cheering and waiting impatiently to catch a glimpse of President Kennedy as he passed through Dallas. Twenty years later, the same scene reoccurred on the streets of Richmond for the filming of the movie commemorating Kennedy's assassination. Cars from the '60's, Richmonders posing as spectators, professional actors and technical equipment transformed Richmond into a Hollywood movie set. The similarity of Richmond's architecture with that of Dallas 20 years ago led to the decision to shoot select scenes in the city. Newspaper advertisements informed interested area residents of audition times prior to the filming dates. Two faculty members landed minor parts in the miniseries, Kennedy: The Final Years. Band director Mr. Frank Chlorie and English teacher Mr. Jeff Saunders took part in the riots and other scenes of the production. Senior Dale Southworth, as a parade spectator, suffered from the heat during the prolonged filming of the scenes. "Everybody was so uncomfortable because we had on fall clothes and it took all day to film only a few minutes of the movie," complained Dale.

Besides affecting those on the movie set, the heat posed problems for people all over. The combination of high temperatures and little rain created hardships for farmers, and therefore consumers, when crops failed to meet standards for sale. Searching for relief those fortunate enough to own an air conditioner lowered their thermostats, leading to an exaggerated demand on Virginia Electric and Power Company. Junior Jenny Galan reflected, "Some days it was even too hot to go to the pool. Sunbathing was impossible when you had to jump into the pool every five minutes to try to cool off." The extreme heat continued through early September, forcing Henrico County to shorten school on several days.

Coppertone tan. Keeping an eye on all of the swimmers, junior Debbie Johnson finishes her shift on the lifeguard stand at Hungary Creek Pool. Students enjoyed working at area swimming pools because they could stay outdoors, visit with friends and make money at the same time.

Back to school. Juniors Stephanie Hunter and Kathleen Kravitz take advantage of their lunch period for some last minute sunbathing. Temperatures soared during early September, resulting in shorter school days.

Show off. Selected from the audience during a Swedish folkdance, senior Tim Wilson tries to blow an Alp horn. Tim travelled to Europe with a group of students for three weeks of the summer.

Newsbreak

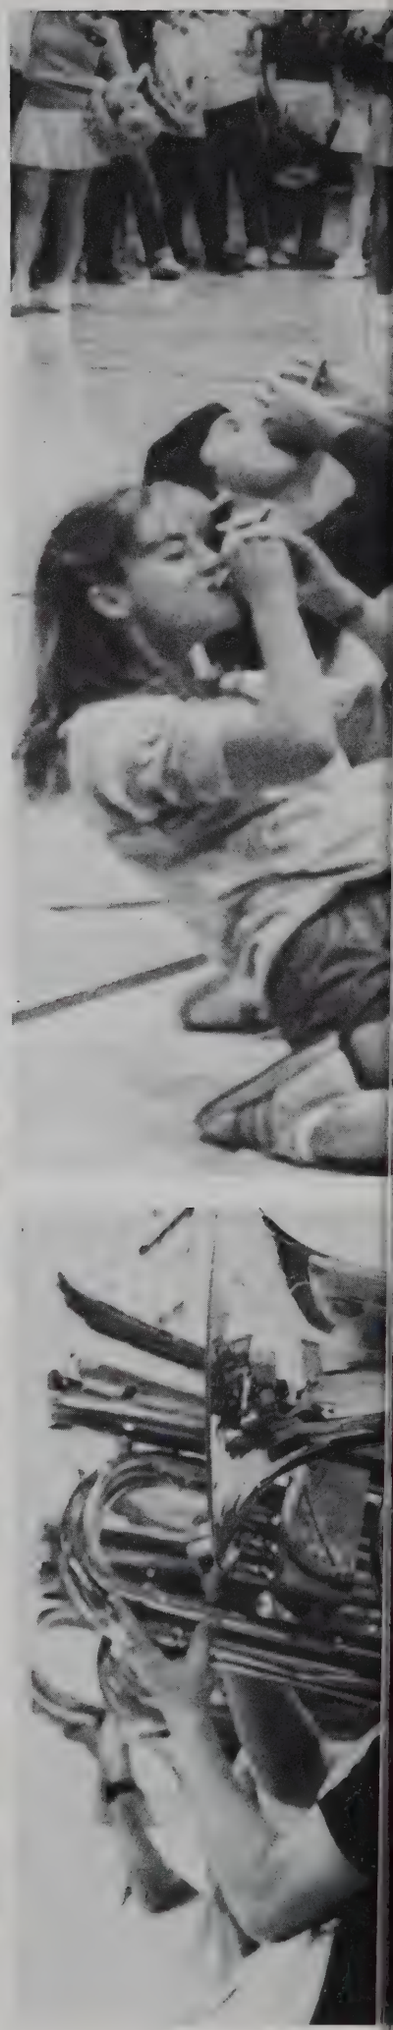
Urgent radio and television announcements reporting that Russian officers shot down a Korean jet frightened Americans in the early fall. Fears and suspicions subsided over time as people began to consider the attack an unfortunate mistake rather than a deliberate act of war. Following this incident more military problems arose. After a violent military coup in Granada, President Reagan decided to send Marines and paratroopers to rescue American citizens trapped on the small Caribbean island.

A different, peculiar type of fighting occurred at home in the toy stores of America. Shoppers pushed, shoved and wrestled in an attempt to obtain one of the prized Cabbage Patch Kids. These chinless, dough-faced dolls, each with its own individual characteristics, captured peoples' hearts. For this reason, a Cabbage Patch Doll became a treasure that people of all ages longed to have. During November and December stores burst with people eagerly purchasing the toys during the holiday season.

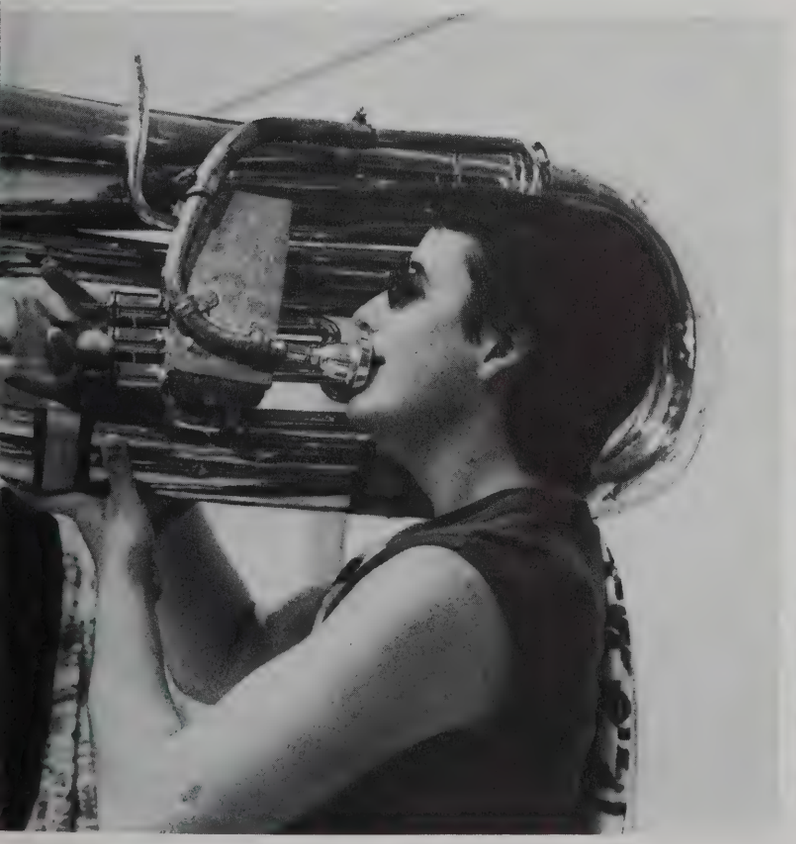
At school, the best-selling items remained tickets to Friday-night football games. The new head coach, Mr. Ed Poole, gave the players inspiration and confidence. Highlighting the season, the 12-8 win over Highland Springs went down in the record books as the first victory over the Springers in 13 years. A number of injuries during the season hampered their success. With the greatest number of members in the team's history, cross country achieved second place in the region. This allowed them to travel to Charlottesville on November 12 for the State Competition.

Black stripes and bow tie. Slowly driving a motorcycle around the track, junior Chris Coursey chauffeurs the Tiger in the Homecoming Parade. The mascot, following the marching band, led the floats through the Parade.

Presenting the colors, the Virginia Air National Guard Color Guard participates in the Veterans' Day Assembly. This short ceremony also included a speech by Mr. Steve Galyen and a performance of "God Bless America" by the choral department.



Like, tubular! Junior David Mize blows enthusiastically into his tuba at a pep rally. The Pep Band added to the festive mood of the pre-game activities.



We can do it too! Imitating the band's famed headchop routine, members of the Senior Class play kazoos instead of trumpets at a fall pep rally.

Tarzan and Jane. Seniors Kevin MacKenzie, Tommy Jackson, and Tanya Dragan await the judges' decision on the best Halloween costume. This contest provided an opportunity for students to display their creativity.

The Land of Oz. Coordinating their float with the theme of the Homecoming Dance, sophomores portray characters from the film classic, The Wizard of Oz. The class captured First Place in the float competition, winning $25 for their treasury.

Candyland. Alison Brahm and other members of the Ninth Grade Girl's Chorus throw treats to the crowd as they circle the track during the Homecoming Parade.

Let's dance. Junior Class princess Stephanie Hunter and her date Paul Cox move to the music of Reunion. When couples tired of dancing they took a break in the refreshment room.

People's court

Sweaty palms and knotted stomachs prevailed as the class princesses and princes filed into heart formed by the band to await the announcement of Homecoming Queen and King. Freshman Wanda Adams, sophomore Lori Callahan, junior Stephanie Hunter and Seniors Val Cameron, Joan Clarke, Robin Crowder, Melinda Galan, Tony Haney, Kim Hicks, Kenny Hyman, Tim Legler, Catherine Montague, Annette Shahda and Julie Tyrolf represented their classes. After the song in honor of the senior band and bandfront members, Principal Mr. Thomas Stavredes crowned Robin and Tony as the Queen and King and Joan as the Maid of Honor.

The Homecoming Dance, sponsored by the Sophomore Class, marked the culmination of Homecoming Week. The week's festivities included an orange and blue day, a fashion show sponsored by the Future Homemakers of America, a pep rally, a pregame parade and the football game against the Jefferson-Hugenot-Wythe Trojans, which J-H-W won 14-0. In addition to organizing the elections and the week's activities, the Pep Club planned the parade, consisting of floats, the band and convertibles carrying the club and class princesses and princes. Creating a float with the theme of "The Wizard of Oz" the Sophomore Class captured first place in the judging of the floats during the halftime show, with the FHA and the Senior Class receiving second and third places, respectively.

Brightly colored streamers greeted those who entered the gymnasium for the dance. Decorations and painted signs carried out the theme "The End of the Rainbow." Reunion provided music for the dancers while the Freshman Class served refreshments.

Queen of hearts. In keeping with tradition, Principal Mr. Tom Stavredes crowns the Homecoming Queen, senior Robin Crowder, during halftime. The Senior Class also named Joan Clarke Maid of Honor and Tony Haney King.

Coin toss. Game co-captains Jimmy Shultz and George Athas wait with Coach Shinault while their opponents, the J-H-W Trojans approach the center of the field. For each football game, two different seniors acted as captains.

Leaders of the pack. Ready to perform their routine, the majorettes and the rest of the bandfront pass the home stands. As the first group in the Homecoming Parade, the band led the floats and cars around the track before the game.

Get nervous

In the five minutes remaining before showtime, members of the Variety Show cast nervously bit their nails in anxiety while making last minute adjustments. Gazing at the back of a black curtain, performers talked and joked with each other trying to relieve the stagefright. The audience, eyeing the other side of the curtain, passed the time talking to neighbors before the show began. Then, the lights dimmed and the auditorium gossip came to a hush as the curtain opened.

The first act of "Not Necessarily the News" entitled "Classroom Band" amused the audience by portraying the typical actions of restless students during the teacher's absence. Other comedy acts included the "Flying Zucchinis" in which Kenny Hyman, Tommy Jackson, Tim Legler, Mary Beth Lynch, and Alice Marks mocked the circus by representing Bulgarian Circus members doing simple minded stunts; "The Doctor's Office" starring Scott Ward satirized the risks taken upon going to the doctor

Before the event began, backstage preparations put a final touch on the performance. These included the applying of makeup, practicing lines and making final alterations. An outsider entering the back room immediately felt the atmosphere of excitement and confusion caused by the running around and last minute rehearsals. Junior Christine Cook commented, "People were nervous and excited at the same time. Knowing your friends would be watching you kind of made things tense, but overall, it was fun."

At the center of all the nervousness and confusion, head director Michelle Akers and co-directors Mary Beth Lynch and Leslie Tate hoped the time and effort they had put into planning and directing the show would keep things running smoothly. Anchor people Tony Witte and Hope Kessler provided continuity by narrating between the skits of the show. As the man on the street, Frank Brown added a professional touch to the performance by reporting local newsworthy occurrences.

The show aired on Thursday, November 10 and Friday, November 11. The change from the usual three performances occurred due to a band competition that some members of the cast took part in.

"I'm a lumberjack," sing seniors John Cutchin, Allen Hall, Tim Coates, and Mike Gaskell as they mock the stereotyped woodcutter. Pleased by the response to their lyrics, the group decided to perform the song on the WRVQ 94 morning show, The Q ZOO.

Hey. Making fun of circus performers, the Flying Zucchinis astound the crowd by performing such difficult feats as putting the ends of a hoola hoop together.

We've got the beat. Bored students entertain themselves by creating a classroom band after the teacher leaves the room. Tyler Shelton, Steve O'Donnell, Chris Mize and Mike Fincham bang on the desks and dance to their own music.

But Beaver! Like the typical mother, June Cleaver (Jessie Whitten) urges her son Beaver (Mark Jones) to get dressed for his birthday party. The Junior Class skit satirized the series "Leave it to Beaver" by exaggerating the roles of the cast.

Achool As his daughter receives a check up, junior Scott Ward patiently waits in the doctor's office. After assuring his daughter nothing would go wrong, Scott caught the illnesses of those around him.

Tastes Great! No, less filling! Senior Varsity Football players dispute the pros of drinking Lite beer. In a take-off in the popular commercial, the argument by deciding they loved Pepsi Light more.

What a relief! Members of The Mousetrap cast bow while receiving a standing ovation after the final performance. The play, running three nights, attracted a responsive audience.

Speaking in an Italian accent, Mr. Paravicini (Michael Winslow) captures the cast's and audience's attention with his monologue explaining his possibility of being the murderer. Many of the actors found it difficult to maintain their accents throughout the entire play and had to spend afternoon practices trying to correct this problem.

Reassuring embrace. Mollie (Kristy Oliver) and Giles (Curtis Davenport) comfort each other as they learn the identity of the murderer. After a suspenseful evening, the discovery of the murderer also relieved the audience.

Payback is murder. Sergeant Trotter (Hile Rutledge) confesses his identity as the murderer after posing as a detective, admitting his intent to kill Mollie Ralston (Kristy Oliver).

Whodunnit?

Who really committed the murder? Members of the audience sat on the edge of their seats awaiting the announcement of the culprit's name. "Hearing the audience react in such amazement was fascinating. They were so responsive that it made doing the play even more fun," recalled Ginny Garnett, who portrayed Miss Casewell in the fall drama, The Mousetrap.

The Shoestring Players presented this mystery, wtitten by Agatha Christie, which attracted over 50 students to try out. The play only required a small cast and crew so those students who did not participate in those areas worked on other aspects of the production including publicity, properties and set construction committees. To make the sets look more realistic, the drama class modeled the actual structures after professionally drawn blue prints. In addition, the crew rented furniture from Eastern Furniture which helped to transform the stage into an authentic looking British boarding house.

Just as sets converted the stage, costumes and make-up added to the transformation of the performers. Period costumes came from sources ranging from the Salvation Army to attics. Using cosmetics to draw wrinkles or to give the illusion of gray hair, Mrs. Debbie Owen helped actors change dramatically into older looking individuals.

Preparations for The Mousetrap required two and a half months of work resulting in a $1000 profit for the Drama department. Although getting ready for opening night took a long time, most actors agreed that tryouts caused the most stress. Besides reciting a memorized monologue, they also had to read with a British accent. English teacher and director Mr. Jeff Saunders thought the accent added to the credibility of the play; however, he did not base his final cast selection on the person's accent.

From the minute they laid eyes on each other, Miss Casewell (Ginny Garnett) and Mrs. Boyle (Maureen Hershman) had a difficult time agreeing on anything. The two disputed the identity of the murderer until Mrs. Boyle becomes the next victim.

Kennedy shot in Richmond. The television miniseries, Kennedy: The Final Years, contained shots of Church Hill which resembled the location of John Kennedy's assassination. Local people served as extras in scenes.

Splendor in the grass. Developed into a television mini-series, Celebrity by Thomas Thompson provided exciting lunchtime reading for sophomore Pat Jernigan. A story about three friends haunted by their sins of the past offered more appeal than the cafeteria's food. Mini-series such as Celebrity helped to compsensate for the lack of popularity of the regularly scheduled programs.

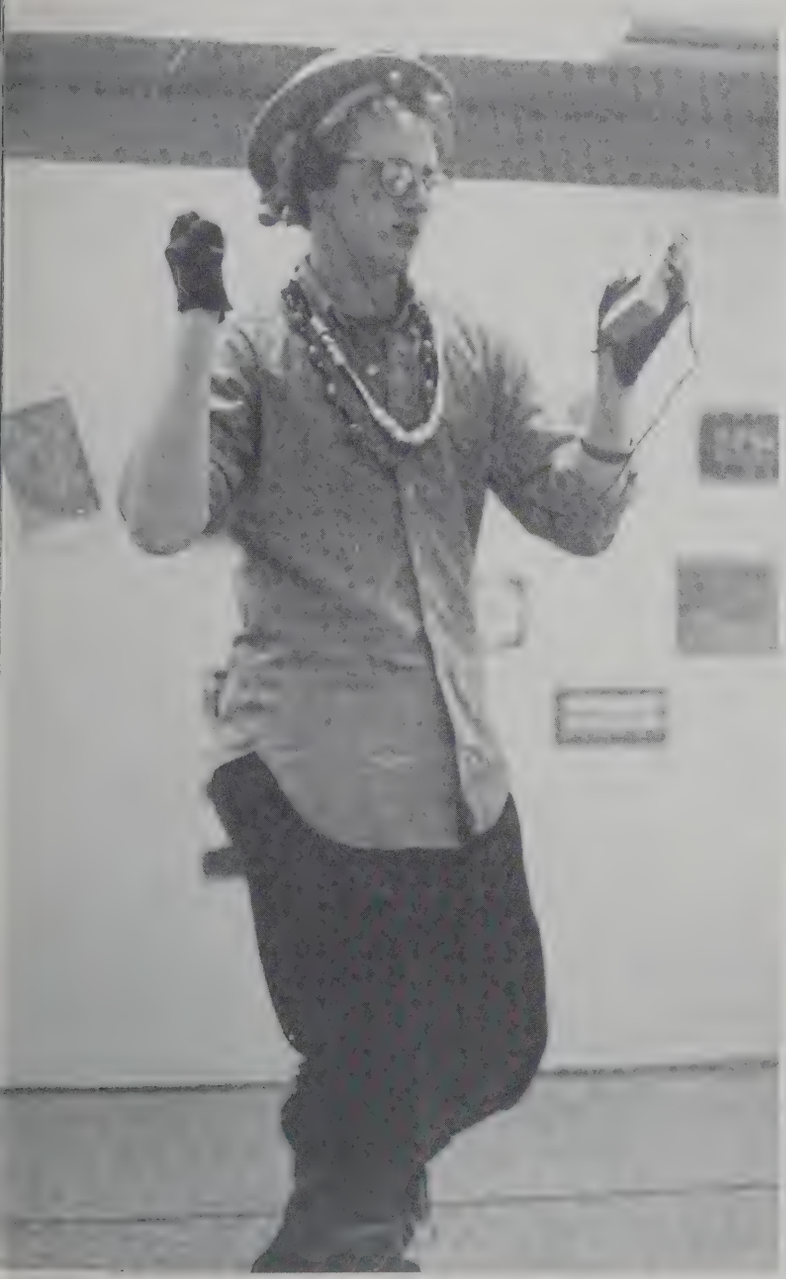
Up in smoke

Snap, crackle, pop! Superstar Michael Jackson suffered econd and third degree burns uring the shooting of a commer- al promoting Pepsi. Sparks from he set ignited his hair causing a ection to burn. In the commercial, Michael Jackson sang Pepsi jingles nodeled after his recording "Billie ean." Accomplishing six other hits ff his album Thriller, Jackson sold ver 30 million copies, making nusic history. "Just listening to him nakes me want to get up and ance" junior Traci Gross mphasized.

Winning a grammy for Best ew Group the English band Culture Club introduced a colorful personality. Wearing eccentric costumes and make-up, lead vocalist Boy George appealed to the American music audience. Another British group, the Police, won a grammy for their song "Every Breath You Take." Their Synchronicity tour sold out concerts throughout the United States. Appealing to a different crowd, Van Halen performed a sold-out concert at the Richmond Coliseum. "Their light show was fantastic, especially the finale," recalled senior Emilye Ford. David Bowie reentered the music scene after years of seclusion with the album "Let's Dance." His Serious Moonlight tour incorporated both his old and new songs drawing all types of fans to his concerts.

Television continued to entertain as the major networks produced mini-series based on novels such as Master of the Game, Lace and Celebrity. Filled with romance, greed, passion and lust, they offered fantasies for viewers and brought high ratings for the networks. The American Broadcasting Company televised the 1984 Winter Olympics from Sarajevo, Yugoslavia. During this competition the U.S. team won eight medals including one gold in men's figure skating and three in skiing.

In the movie industry, Risky Business provided a means of escape as it portrayed teenage partying and outrageous behavior. On a more serious note, Terms of Endearment leaned toward a family-oriented theme. The Big Chill revealed the lives of former liberals as they reunited years later. Barbra Streisand produced, directed and starred in Yentl, playing a woman disguised as a man in order to further her study of Judaism.



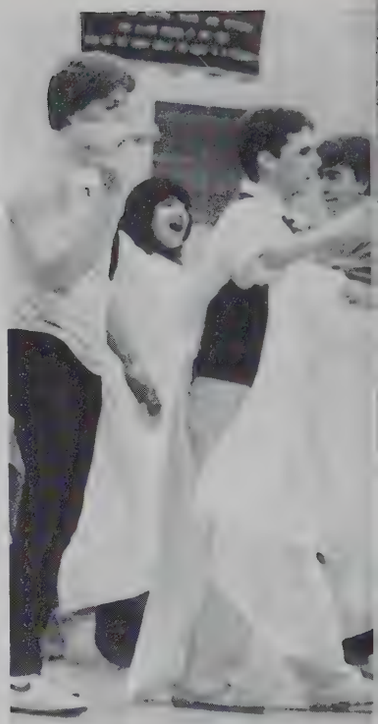
Oh, Boy! Impersonating Boy George, freshman Kevin Navin dances to the music of Culture Club. Boy George's clothes, dance movements and make-up became his trademark.

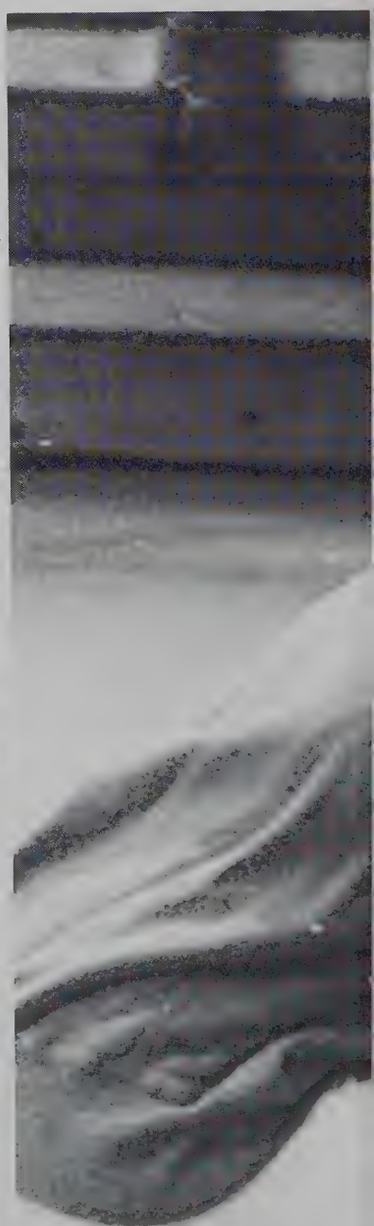
The Police are on my back. Junior Stephanie Tucker demonstrates the popularity of the Police by her T-shirt. Students bought T-shirts and other memorabilia at area concerts.

Give me a break! For those who have the talent, breakdancing proved an exciting dance form. The movie Flashdance gave birth to breakdancing and soon other movies imitated this theme.

Chorus line. During a winter pep rally, seniors release energy performing their crazy antics to the song "Shout!"

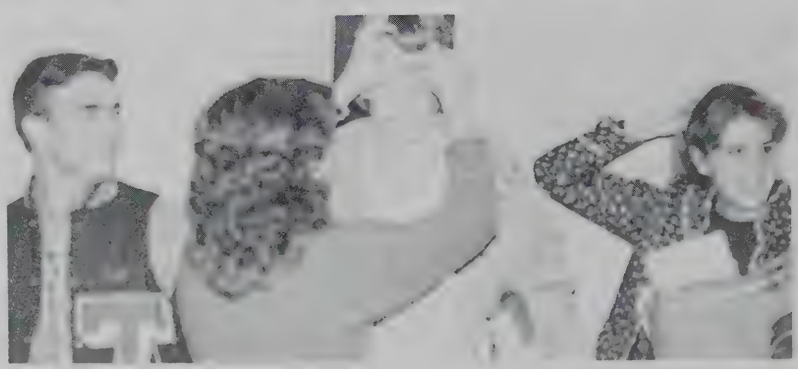
Girl talk. Studying a difficult maneuver, members of the gymnastics team discuss their opponent's strategy. In spite of strong competition, the girls managed to finish the season with a record of 4-3.





Will it hurt? Senior Kathy Reams waits for the appearance of the dreaded needle at the Blood Drive sponsored by the S.C.A. The Drive proved so successful that it conintued a second day.

Measuring up. In preparation for graduation activities, seniors Luke Reid, Mundy Viar and Lee Ann Simms wait to be fitted for their graduation caps.



The big chill

Despite constant frigid temperatures the possibility of snow days dwindled as students struggled through the winter months missing only one day due to inclement weather. Days built into the school calendar allowed students to miss this time and still graduate early in June.

Although the school buses occasionally found it impossible to maneuver through the slippery side streets, everyone managed to get to the parks for skating and sledding, or to the mountains for days of snow skiing. Resorts such as Wintergreen, Brice, and Snowshoe offered discounts or group rates for clubs and provided transportation at a reduced rate. Students took advantage of this offer and went with youth groups for overnight stays. Snow skiing proved a favorite sport among novices and more experienced adventurers and senior Rhonda Bullock decided, "I spend as much time on the ground as on my skiis, but it's fun either way!"

Other skiing enthusiasts enjoyed the sport the safe way — by watching the Winter Olympics on television. Strong competition ensured between rival countries as athletes struggled to capture the gold, silver and bronze medals.

As the winter months dragged on bringing sleet and rain, students continued to study and prepare for exams. Winter break provided a brief period of relaxation and vacation, but some utilized this time for research papers and other school-related assignments.

For those who braved the cold, concerts in February offered musical entertainment. The Police, Alabama and Van Halen performed at nearby coliseums, allowing those with different tastes to enjoy their favorite artists.

Sticky fingers. Juniors Kelly Marrin and Lisa Broaddus tape decorations to the hum-drum gym walls to transform the sports hall to a dance hall. An opportunity for girls to ask their dream guys for a date, the Sadie Hawkins Dance added romantic excitement to the winter months.

For the record

Psyched up to get down to the top hits played by disc jockey Hal Hathaway from WKIE, students rushed to the dance floor to strut their stuff. "I really enjoyed having a disc jockey because of the variety of music, where as with a band you can never really be sure if they will play good music!" commented junior Lisa Dolan. Before drawing up a contract with a disc jockey, the Junior Class Council took a poll to see if students wanted to hear records or live music at the Sadie Hawkins Dance held on February 4. From the results received, they decided to try something new and feature the disc jockey. Spending only $150 for the music, the class yielded $700 profits for the treasury.

At 10:00 p.m. students crowded around for the announcement of Li'l Abner and Daisy Mae. Elected by their classmates, Juniors Steve O'Donnell and Jenny Galan led the next dance.

Hanging out to dry on a clothesline, overalls, plaid shirts and long underwear disguised the bleachers and added to the country atmosphere. Also supplying a rustic setting, a romantic fireplace served as a backdrop for pairs who chose to have their pictures taken. Couples also visited the preacher at the Marryin' Sam Shack. Playing the role for the first time, Coach Robert Hoskins performed his duties as minister, giving plastic wedding bands and a marriage certificate which lasted until midnight.

May I have this dance? Stepping onto the floor, juniors Steve O'Donnell and Jenny Galan congratulate each other for winning the Li'l Abner and Daisy Mae awards.

Let's Boogie. Dressed in plaid shirts and blue jeans, Tigers prove that even country bumpkins know how to move. The uptempo beat kept the couples alive.

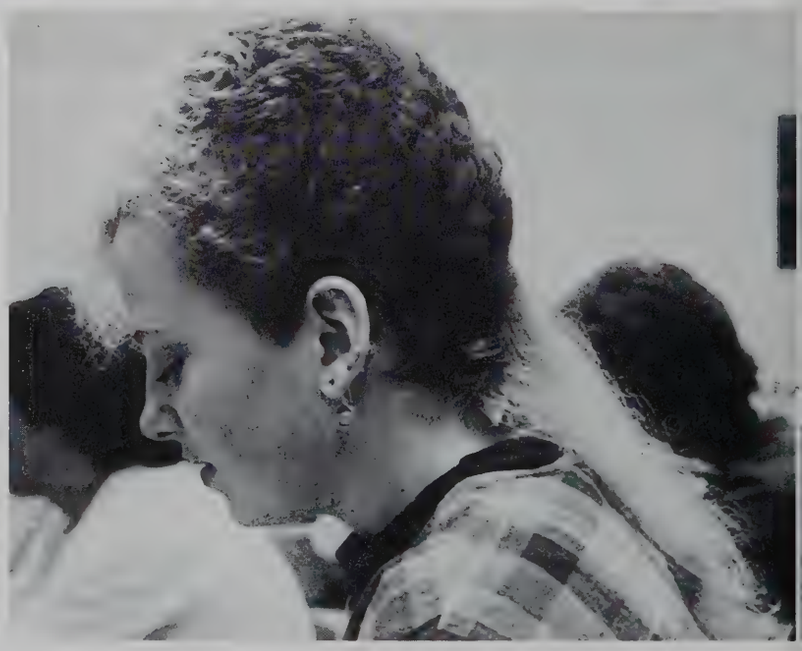
Cool and refreshing. A couple of cokes and a handful of cookies energize tired dancers before the next number begins. Freshmen Hymie Genderson and Seon Park served the snacks and also sold daisies which netted profits of over $150.

Gettin' hitched. Finally snagging their choice mates, impatient girls drag their guys into the Chapel of Luv to tie the knot. Since the ceremony only cost 50 cents, the newlyweds could splurge on the honeymoon.

What do you mean temporary? Couples become husband and wife until midnight, the hour that their marriage license expired. Marryin' Sam, otherwise known as Coach Rob Hoskins, performed the ceremonies.

Taking a break. Escaping for a moment from the hectic dance floor, junior Brenda Donohoe and sophomore Keith Seiler discuss their plans for later that evening. The couple debated whether or not they would rather go out to eat or go to a party.

Nifty fifties. Cropped pants offer a new twist to the fifties fad of pedal pushers. The warm weather gave the girls a chance to show off the popular and comfortable style.



Set for action. Sporting the latest look in men's hair, junior John Lucas shows off contrasting lengths. Guys experimented with their sideburns, cutting them above the ear.

Turnabout

Keeping up with the fashion trends, guys and girls reversed the customary dress code. Females turned to dancewear for sleeveless and layered sweatshirts, daring miniskirts and colorful bandanas to acquire the Flashdance look. Pleated pants, plaid shirts with coordinated ties and jazz shoes transformed the guys into sharply dressed young men. Other males continued to dress casually as they became surf punks, dressed in long-sleeved Wave-Riding Vehicle tee-shirts, slip-on canvas Vans and wild sunglasses.

Pierced ears and trends in haircut styles became unisex. Faddish hairstyles such as the blunt cut and bleached rat tails appeared on campus. While girls pierced their ears two and three times, daring guys got one of their ears pierced in order to draw attention.

Besides contributing to the fashion scene, the movie Flashdance also influenced music and dance styles. Students began breakdancing as a means of self-expression, going to places such as the Cellar Door, Celebrity Room and Crystal Pistol. These establishments opened their doors to young Virginians on weekends, allowing teens to demonstrate their expertise in breakdancing and moonwalking, Michael Jackson's trademark.

At home, computers and Trivial Pursuit entertained families. They acquired computers for business as well as personal use. Owners could design their own programs and games or purchase preprogramed discs from computer stores. While computers puzzled and challenged some, Trivial Pursuit tested others on their knowledge of obscure facts. Even though the game cost $38, stores could not keep up with the demand. Those who wanted to purchase the popular board game added their name to a two or three month waiting list. People lucky enough to own the game found they quickly became addicted, spending hours testing themselves, friends and family.

Where's the beach? Proudly displaying the summer uniform of WRV shirts and Vans, these Virginian beach boys make plans for a weekend of surfing.

Your move. Senior Kenny Hyman and his mother play the country's most wanted board game, Trivial Pursuit. The game, invented by two bankrupt Canadians, gained in popularity throughout the United States.

Heads or tails. Senior Toni Harrison's unique hairstyle shows the trend toward individualized fashion, whether in hair, jewelry or clothing.

Dress rehearsal

Flocked around the steps near Building 10, scantily clad seniors continued the Beach Day tradition. Music blared while seniors sunbathed, skateboarded and played frisbee. The temporary escape from the everyday world helped releive feelings caused by spring fever.

Changes in the bell schedule for year-end assemblies also broke the monotony of classes. The student body saw their peers recognized for their accomplishments during the National Honor Society and Beta tappings and at the Awards Assembly. Using the block schedule during senior exams allowed an extensive last-day review before underclassmen began their exams.

The exam schedule posed a problem for senior varsity baseball players during games preceding the state championship. Because of rain postponements, they played the regional game during senior exam week. On Saturday, June 2, the Tigers met the Halifax Comets in the final game for the State Championship. Families and friends travelled to Highland Springs High School to watch the game which ended in defeat with a score of 7-4. They finished the season with a record of 22-2.

As the year came to a close, students tried to find other ways to spend their evenings rather than going to sporting events. Movie theaters became an obvious choice. One of the most well-known choices of movies was Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom, the sequel to Raiders of the Lost Ark.

Less than ten calories each. Trying to win the Lifesaver contest for the junior class Ellen Specter and John Harris concentrate on the candy's path to each other's toothpicks. Field Day, made up of contests between all of the classes, gave the seniors a chance to win something for a change.

Is it time for the beach already? Students enrolled in Ms. Betsy Raines' Advanced Senior Math class refused to return to class on a warm day in May. In order to make things complete, Danny Rosenbaum searched for lost items by using his metal detector.

Walk much? Jenny Galan and Larry Soble hobble to the finish line in the three-legged race. They tried to gain points for the juniors in the inter-class competition.

Tanning salon. Junior John Churn starts on his summer tan by using his chemistry book as a reflector. Because of frequent rainy spring days students took every opportunity to get sun on the few nice days.

Front and center. Senior Dan Brown leads junior John Carroll to the table to receive his flower and candle as a new member of Beta. Beta and the National Honor Society held their tappings in an assembly on May 9.

Sidewalk Riding Vehicles. Skateboard pros Scott Hoffman, Larry Schexneider and Frank Brown show off their talents on senior Beach Day. The surfpunks tried to capture the audience's attention by doing tricks on the sidewalk. Senior Week gave the students a chance to bend the rules a bit and soak up some sun during lunch.

Ebony and Ivory. Seniors Felicia Pollard and Eric Thome emphasize the contrasts between black and white in a sultry dance number.

In the spotlight. Senior Peggy Brown takes a break during intermission. Throughout the show Peggy followed the script closely for her cues to operate the spots.

Send in the clowns. Members of the Barnum chorus display costumes designed for them by the Home Economics Department and Mrs. Debbie Owens. Mrs. Joan Dodd and art students helped by decorating certain costumes.

Greatest show on earth

Popcorn, peanuts, cotton candy, clowns and wild animals filled the auditorium a half-hour before the beginning of the Spring Musical Barnum. The show explored the life of the famed circus entrepreneur, P. T. Barnum. Presented for the first time in the Richmond area, it also became Director Mr. Jeff Saunders' greatest accomplishment. "Because of all of the makeup and costume changes and the elaborate scenery it was the most challenging musical I've ever attempted, but yet the most rewarding," he commented. Mr. Saunders' dedication encouraged cast members to give all their talent and most of their time to the cause. He also added his efforts to the sale of circus treats such as cotton candy and peanuts.

Rehearsals for the play began immediately after first semester exams and in the week before the show they lasted until 10:00 and 11:00 P.M. "Although it was a lot of hard work, it was a lot of fun and a great experience," commented Paula Weaver.

The scenery, costumes, and music combined to create a realistic atmosphere. Mr. Ronnie Atkins and Industrial Arts classes aided in the construction of the complicated sets. This included a museum entrance, side shows and a raised platform for the spotlights and announcer Hile Rutledge. The set construction crew also built a platform over the stage for the circus. In contrast to previous production Barnum called for the orchestra to take a more active part in the musical, wearing uniforms, parading into the auditorium and remaining in full view of the audience at all times.

Deborah Wagoner and Curtis Davenport portrayed Chary and P. T. Barnum, supported by a cast of 14 and a chorus of 11. Appearing in her first leading role in a school production, Deborah explained, "Being in Barnum was one of the most exciting experiences in my life. It was sad to see the show end, just like when the real circus leaves town."

One brick at a time. Depicting the theme of starting at the bottom and building to the top, chorus members gather to encourage P. T. to pursue his dream of opening his own museum.

Quick Change. Aiding Barnum (Curtis Davenport) with his wardrobe, Wilton (Eddie Perry) discusses the reception to celebrate the opening of the museum. Barnum changed clothes on stage without causing a break in the action of the play.

Night lights

Music and flashing lights greeted couples as they approached the Belmont Recreation Center for the 1984 Junior-Senior Prom. After passing through the French glass doors, guests discovered not only a dance floor but other rooms. Students found plenty of space to congregate in a sitting room, a refreshment room or outdoors on the patio. For the second year, prom took place off campus, giving its guests an atmosphere of sophistication instead of memories of gym class.

The plantation-like appearance of Belmont Park helped portray the theme of Gone With the Wind. Because of the permanent southern decor, the rooms did not require many decorations.

Outside on the patio of Belmont, the senior court formed figures representing class activities. The court girls broke away from the traditional colors and wore scarlet dresses instead. The guys dressed in black tails with white cummerbunds and bow ties. After the court's last dance, the other couples went inside and continued dancing to the music of Staircase.

Elbow room. David Mize and Julie Etheridge find their own space to dance to the music of Staircase. The band played popular tunes of well known artists such as Lionel Richie and Billy Idol.

Going in style. Two members of senior court, Tony Haney and Melinda Galan, walk forward as class sponsor Mr. Steve Burgess introduces them. All 11 couples received similar introductions before they began their formations.

My aching feet! Herbie Layne and his friends rest after a hard workout on the dance floor. A room with tables and chairs provided a place for guests to socialize away from the music of the band.

Serious moonlight. Moving to the spotlight dance, the seniors complete the traditional court waltz. The senior class selected the 22 members in March by voting on a list of nominees.

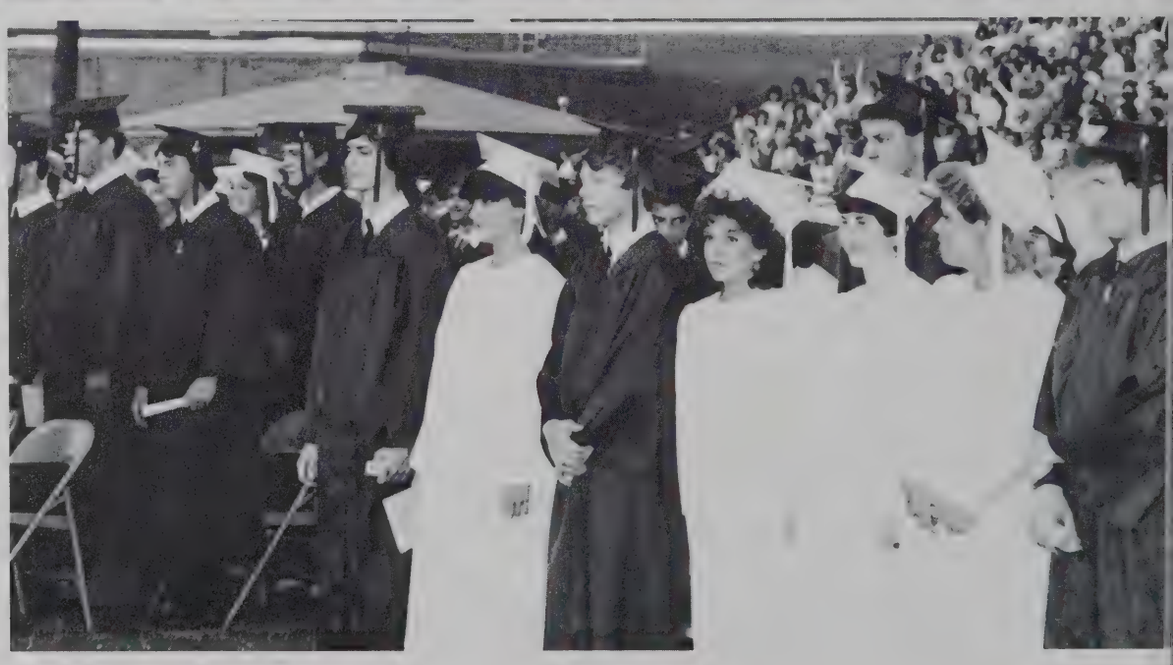
Too close for comfort. Esther Bogin and Kevin Spector along with other couples crowd the dance floor at the Belmont Recreation Center. Compared to the high school gym where plenty of room could be found to dance, the smaller club floor made it seem as though more couples attended.

In the spotlight. Senior court executes formations for parents and prom guests. The court practiced weeks in advance to prepare for their performance on prom night.

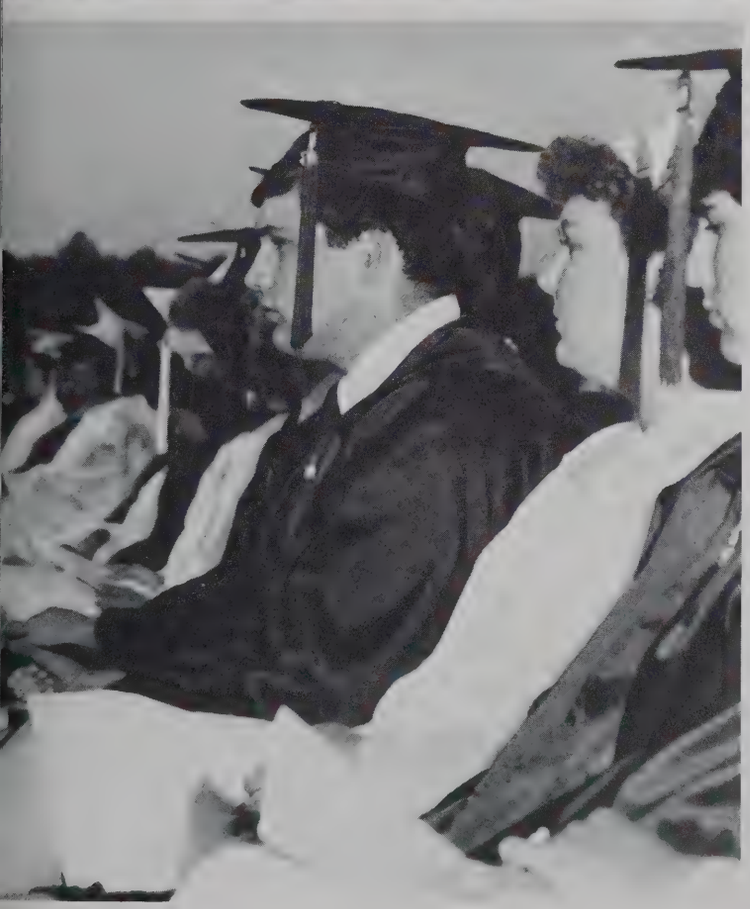
Refresher course. In the refreshment room, tired dancers take a break to eat fresh fruits and vegetables. Chosen because of participation in class council, ten freshmen served as hosts and hostesses at the dance.

Hard work pays off. Delivering his speech, Kenneth Jay Hyman stresses the importance of thinking to his classmates. Kenny obviously knew the value of knowledge by earning the salutatorian medal in a class numbering 265.

Finally! As the processional ends, seniors look forward to the beginning of the formalities. The music allowed them time to reflect on their memories of four years of high school.



ay Cheese. Reconized for his efforts, John Deal wins the Buster Hill Memorial Award as obin Crowder, Lisa Ettinger, and Jennifer Han applaud him. These seniors as well as an Brown, Peggy Brown, Tim Legler, Rob Stanley, Leslie Tate and Mundy Viar received the John Randolph Tucker High School Faculty Award.



Hats off

Modifying the usual order of the ceremony, School Board member Mr. Denys Grant declared the 265 members of the Class of 1984 as graduates before Principal Thomas C. Stavredes presented them with their diplomas and certificates. Because of the change, confused seniors lost their chance to throw their hats in the air to mark the end of the ceremony. Aside from the change, the Commencement Exercises went smoothly.

Baccalaureate took place on June 3. Reverend Eddie L. Perry gave the Invocation and Dr. Lloyd F. Jackson, Jr., presented the Address. Following him, Reverend William Pollok pronounced the Benediction.

At graduation, the Class of '84 invited Dr. Myron Berman to give the Invocation. Mr. Carrington Tate, former assistant principal and currently the county's Social Studies supervisor, spoke about measuring success and added a sentimental touch by reminding his graduating daughter, "I love you, Leslie." The two student speakers, Kenny Hyman and Tony Haney tied for Salutatorian. Each reminisced about their four years of high school and expressed their ideas about the class' future. The school presented Kenny with the John Randolph Tucker High School Memorial Award. Starting with this class, the school also presented the winner of the Memorial Award with the Herbert F. Carter, Jr. Memorial Scholarship Award. Tony received the Salutatorian Medal and Leland Y. Tsao received the Valedictorian Medal. Other awards included the Buster Hill Scholarship that went to John Deal for exemplifying "strength in body and mind, overcoming the difficulties in this life." Continuning the tradition, the Choral Department sang "You'll Never Walk Alone" followed by the procession for receiving diplomas. The ceremony ended with the Alma Mater and a few remarks from Mr. Stavredes.

A look at the future. Listening attentively to guest speaker Mr. Carrington Tate, seniors Doug Baber, Paige Atwell and George Athas wait patiently for their diplomas. Realizing graduation marked the end of their life at high school, the seniors anticipated a new start and a change of pace.

Follow the leader. With programs in hand the Class of '84 files onto the football field as commencement exercises begin on June 4. Fortunately for the graduates and their families, a clear day enabled the school to hold the ceremony outside instead of in the gymnasium.

As summer vacation drew to a close, Tiger field came to life. Tennis players practice groundstrokes, football players lifted weights and runners struggled through the miles. Thes athletes as well as others devoted time, enthusiasm and energy because of their love fo

Sport

Even with fewer students to try out for athletic teams, Tigers still put the best foot forward. Their ability, dedication, and skill overcame the pr blems that a smaller student body posed.

Early in August, fall sports teams began their drive for excellence. Th football team worked out under the leadership of a new head coac Mr. Ed Poole. The cross-country team started the season with more tha 40 members, the largest team ever. Their rigorous practices prove worthwhile, as the team won second place in the districts and the regionals. The surprisi turn out caused individual as well as team competition, as each runner worked toward h personal best.

Striving for her best, senior Julie Freeman won the Best All-Around gymnast award in th Central Region for the fourth consecutive year. Julie became the only person ever achieve this goal. Breaking another record, Tim Legler scored over 1000 points during h high school career. In the final home game, against arch-rival Douglas Freeman, Tim passe the 1000 mark. During the Awards Assembly, Tim received a bronzed basketball co memorating his accomplishment. Coach Ralph Crockett decided to end his coaching caree on a high note and announced his resignation at the end of the year.

The Smaller enrollment did not affect the Varsity Baseball team's performance. Besid winning more AAA State Championships than any other high school, three team membe junior Chris Garrett, senior Tony Haney and sophomore Mike Milchin earned spots on the Fi Team All-Metro, selected by the Richmond News Leader.

Whether the competition was on the individual or team level, the members stayed in t physical shape. Although less people tried out, Tigers proved that a spirit of team coope tion and individual effort counted the most.

The thinker. To save time, junior Jenny Galan looks over some homework before gymnastics practice starts. Besides gymnastics, Jenny also demonstrated her athletic ability in track and cross country.

Jumpball. Faking out the Armstrong Kennedy Jaguars, junior T. M. Nuckols goes up for the shot. Plays like this one brought the team a winning season.

The agony of de feet. Before an important meet, senior Robin Crowder stretches to warm up her muscles. Selected by her coaches, Robin earned the title of Most Valuable Player on the girls' track team.

No pain, no gain. Injured during a football game, senior Mark Murphy hobbles on crutches. Although he could not finish the season, Mark's talent helped the team to several victories early in the season.

Comeback

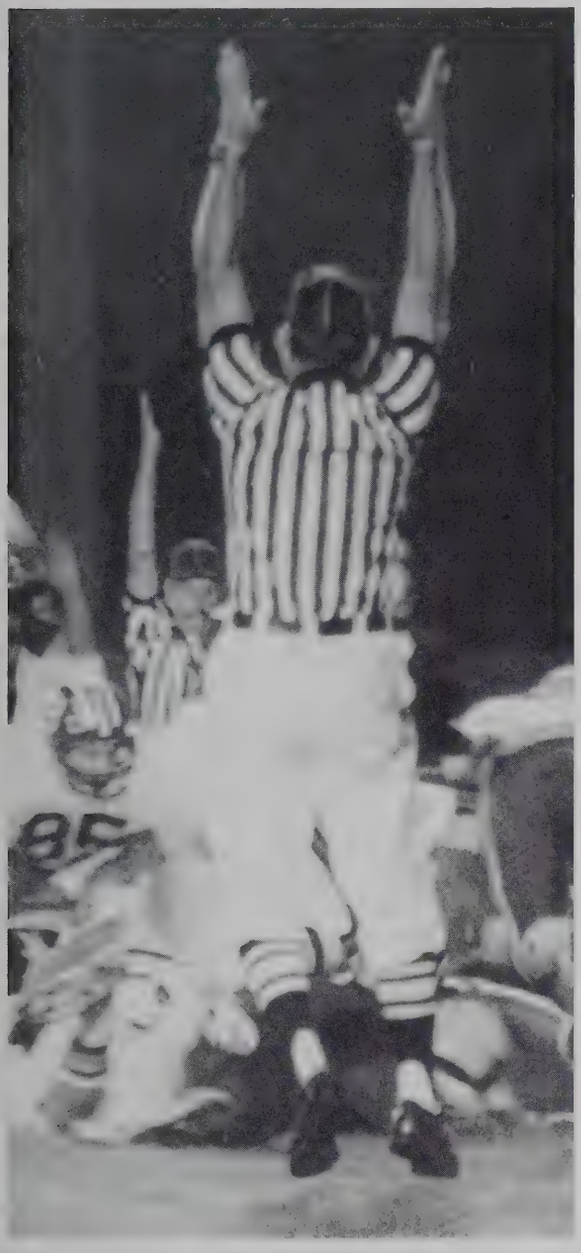
Joking with assistant coach Chic Shinault, senior fullbacks Eddie Perry and Luke Reid try to rid themselves of the dreaded butterflies felt before an important game. To ease the tension the team met for pregame dinners, sponsored by the Boosters Club. Between food fights, the players joked around, psyching each other up for the game.

After a disheartening opening game the Varsity football team sprang back to amass three wins, one loss and one tie during their next five contests. In this span of time the playoffs looked promising, and the team felt they might have the opportunity to participate. However, this possibility ceased as the Tigers stumbled and lost their next three games. They completed the season on the upside though when the team beat the Hermitage Panthers 12-7.

During the pre-season the extreme heat presented the only obstacle the players faced. Because of the temperature and humidity the players needed water breaks at each practice. Attempting to avoid the haze, the team practiced during the early morning and the late afternoon. Needless to say, most of the time the efforts to keep cool proved unsuccessful. Senior Tommy Jackson commented, "If it hadn't been for all the water breaks we had everyday, we all would have dehydrated."

A major change occurred as Coach Ed Poole replaced retired head coach Al Rinaldi. According to Coach Poole the strength of the team surfaced in the offensive line. Crediting the newcomer for the team's victories, quarterback Rob Reid noted, "Coach Poole is not only a disciplinarian but a strategist as well." Due to the philosophy of Coach Poole, the performance of the team improved over that of last year.

Touchdown. Coming from behind in the fourth quarter the Tigers scored the winning touchdown to down Armstrong-Kennedy 7-6 at City Stadium.



All the right moves. Dropping back to avoid defensive pressure quarterback Rob Reid attempts a play. It succeeded in getting the Tigers closer to the Springers' goal line.

Scramble! Running for his life junior Rob Reid tries to escape the grasp of R. C. Whitman of Highland Springs. Rob's efforts proved successful, and this apparent loss turned into a gain of 15 yards.

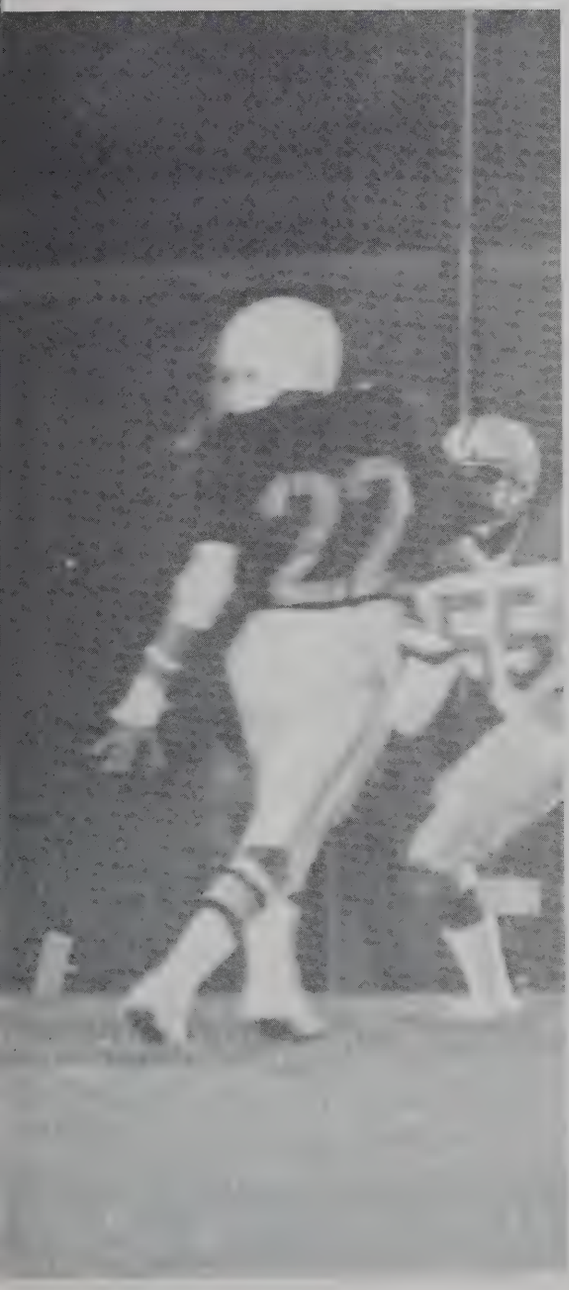
Accident prone

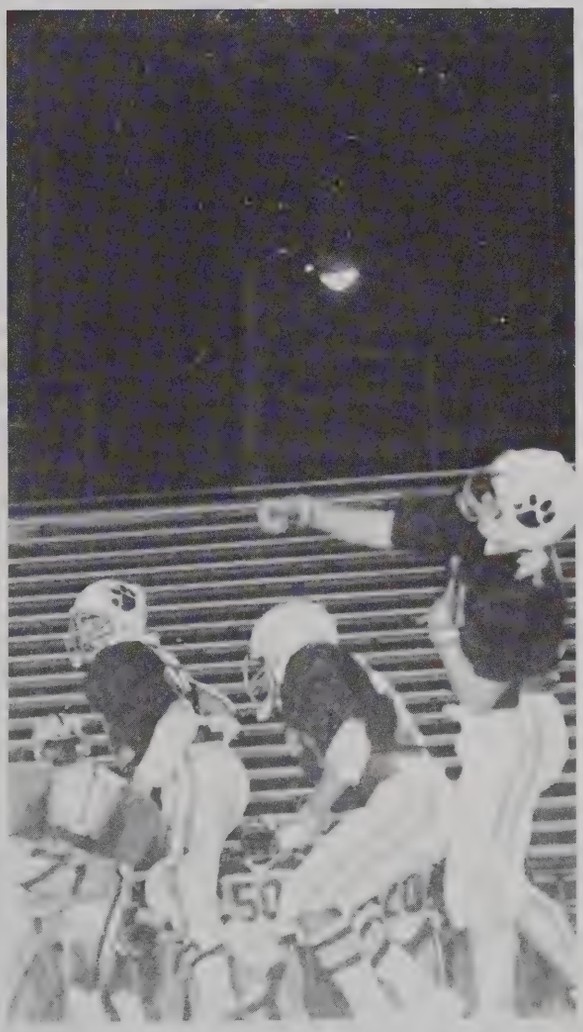
Following a rocky start the Junior Varsity Football Team surprised doubters when they upset rch-rival Douglas Freeman 21-7. At that time, the ictory seemed like a turning point for a struggling eam without much firepower. However, due to ome injuries to key players and the team's lack of ze, their chance of success wilted.

In the preseason, extreme temperatures resented a major obstacle for the coaches and layers. Constant waterbreaks and varying practice mes seemed the only answer. The inexperience f most of these players became another detrimenal factor towards hopes of a successful season. A re-season scrimmage against the Benedictine adets offered these players a chance to play nder game-like situations. In this scrimmage the igers established a basic running attack that would erve as the backbone of their offense.

During the year the team members experienced injuries which created setbacks. In the Armstrong-Kennedy game the Tigers lost most of their offensive strive as starting quarterback Des Proctor suffered a seperated shoulder. Doug Defalco tried to fill in the vacancy but suffered a back injury in the process. In the same Bart Proctor saw action due to the accumulation of injuries by the Tiger quarterbacks.

"Overall I'd say this year was productive in the aspect that some of these players gained the experience necessary to be successful in varsity ball," commented head coach Jay Cox on his feelings toward the year. Sophomore Johnny Cappocelli earned the Most Valuable player with his consistent play in the defensive backfields. Freshman Scott Soukrop earned the Most Improved Player Award.





On target. Sophomore Doug DeFalco puts the ball into the play and releases the long pass. Further down the field running backs James Dameron and Johnny Capocelli await the arrival of the football.

Under pressure. The Tigers attempt a running play to move the ball in for the score. Number 22 Rodney Jackson circled around the back for a fake hand off in hope of puzzling the defenders.

Most Valuable Player. Voted on by his temmates, sophomore Johny Capocelli received the title of Most Valuable Player because of the number of interceptions and completions he made.

Feet first

Determination and dedication caused the runners to keep their pace in spite of aching muscles and sheer exhaustion. Upon hearing the long-awaited words warm down, weary cross country team members slowed their pace and dreamed of bandaging blisters and soaking in a hot bath. Daily practice runs of five to ten miles aided the Boy's Cross Country Team in building endurance and achieving a 9-2 record. The conditioning paid off further as the team placed second in both the District and Regional Meets. This achievement took the boys to Charlottesville for the State Meet.

The 42 member team emerged as the largest in the school's history. Coach Rob Hoskins remarked, "I was super pleased. We were one of the top teams in the state." Individual accomplishment became a common occurence as 14 runners entered the Top Seven Club during the season. The most consistent of the 14 included Robert Goodman, Thomas Holsinger, Walied Mahmoud and Des Proctor.

The girls' team also became accustomed to success as they finished fifth in the District Meet defeating Patrick Henry, Highland Springs, Armstrong-Kennedy and Henrico. This achievement earned the girls the opportunity to race in the Regional Meet where they finished seventh.

Both the Girls' and Boys' Cross Country Teams participated in individual races to supplement the regular season. The teams ran at colleges such as the College of William and Mary, the University of Virginia and Georgetown University.

After finding a suitable spot for placement of the ball, Gary Soltes executes a successful drive off the tee.

A stroke of luck

A dramatic one-stroke victory over Patrick Henry enabled the golf team to qualify for the regional playoffs for the second time in three years. Problems such as switching the season from spring to fall and getting familiar with a new style of coaching challenged them early in the year. Inexperience also hampered the group, one of the youngest in recent years. Despite these obstacles, the golf team still posted a 11 and 5 record. They finished third in the district and placed fifth in the regional playoffs.

The new coach, Mr. Ronnie Atkins, joined the team because the former one, Mr. Chic Shinault, had other committments. Sophomore Richie Sharff emphasized, "Coach Atkins put in more time than expected and was willing to help." Senior Kevin MacKenzie added that the new coach, "pulled us together and brought our scores down."

Each of the eleven players participated in at least one match during the season to enable them to learn more about the sport. Although the team lacked experience, Coach Atkins commented, "we played well, but were simply overmatched in the regionals." The team as a whole did not qualify for the state tournament; however, junior Gary Soltes achieved a low enough score to travel to this competition. Gary topped off the season by placing eleventh in the tournament.

Most Valuable Player. Junior Gary Soltes shot a one over, 36, against Patrick Henry for his lowest score of the season. He achieved a combined score of 162 for 36 holes at the State Tournament in Virginia Beach, ranking him eleventh in the state.

Highs and lows

Hope and desire surged forth as the Girl's Tennis team prepared for a new season. The major disadvantage, lack of experience, hindered the team until they became accustomed to their competition. Once sure of each member's talents and how to use them to the team's best advantage, the Tigers could defeat competitive teams such as Hermitage and Lee Davis.

Despite the inconvenience of inexperience, the team demonstrated their competitive spirit by compiling an overall 8-4 record. Top seed Peggy Brown, a senior who played on the team for four years, displayed her ability by obtaining an undefeated record of 12-0. Peggy later advanced to the District Tournament but lost to Henrico's Amy Seward in the second round. Senior Lisa Pennington and freshman Vicki Bond, who held the second and third positions on the team, also guided the team to a winning season by attaining numerous victories. Coach Pat Brown stated, "The team played most competitively against Monacan." The Tigers went into the doubles play of this match losing 4-2; however, during this competition the team made a quick comeback to defeat Monacan 5-4.

Two hands are better than one. Senior Peggy Brown's backhand style proved her best defensive maneuver. Peggy maintained the position of number one seed for three years and remained undefeated during regular season play in her senior year.

Warm up. Junior Leslie Kite and freshman Missy Hudgins volley before the Freeman match.

Hit it. Freshman Kendal Powers prepares to strike the ball to teammate Grace Eng. As the seasons changed, the girls tried to stay warm by adding layers to their summer wardrobe.

Most Valuable Player. Senior Peggy Brown used her ability to compete under pressure to obtain an undefeated regular season record of 12-0. Peggy played in the position of top seed for three years and also was ranked 6 in the state.

We did it! Elated coaches and team members leap and race towards the center of the court to congratulate teammates. Tigers appeared unusually happy because the Freeman game marked their first win of the season with a score of 39-31.

Let's go team. Sophomore Gail Kibler organizes a new play as teammate Meg Powell listens for her signals. The team practiced such plays during their daily afternoon practices.

Hotshots

Cool dips in neighborhood pools did not tempt members of the girls' basketball team as they traded this type of comfort for mornings of running in the hot, muggy gymnasium. The girls gave up their final two weeks of freedom and returned to school to begin practicing for the upcoming season. Performing drills or scrimmaging during this time conditioned the girls.

This work could not make up for the team's small size and lack of game experience. However, seniors Meg Powell and Robin Montgomery's consistent participation and encouragement helped the team cope with these problems. Coach Peg Langdon claimed, "Their leadership was a stabilizing influence throughout the season and earned them Co-Most Valuable Player Awards."

Ms. Langdon's coaching experience and UVA graduate Anna Morris' new ideas helped the girls achieve an improved record over last year. Ms. Morris played basketball at UVA and she introduced strategies and helpful hints to the team. She spent time with the beginning players to help them develop their shooting techniques.

The season's highlights occurred when the team defeated Freeman twice. This enabled the girls to participate in the District Tournament, but they lost to Armstrong-Kennedy. "Success was not measured by the number of games won or lost, but in our improvement from the beginning of the season to the end," Coach Langdon pointed out. Near the end of the season the team began to score more points, closing the gap of previous defeats.

Unable to penetrate the opposition, sophomore Autumn Stanley brings the ball back out to set up a new play. Despite the Tigers' attempts, they fell to Monacan 16-64.

High anxiety

Most Valuable Player. Senior Tim Legler scored over 1,000 points in his career averaging 23.0 per game and a place on the All-State team.

Sitting on the edge of their seats, the anxious crowd fought to support the varsity basketball team by yelling across the jam-packed gymnasium at Benedictine. The enthusiasm shown by the Cadets provoked the crowd into a heated shouting match. The tension reached its peak during the closing of the third overtime. Two Cadets draped Tim Legler as he went up for a jump shot from deep in the corner. While in the air, he spotted Ken Campbell under the basket and passed the ball to him. Campbell scored, and the Tigers triumphed over Benedictine by a score of 52-50. The varsity basketball team experienced 16 similar cliff hanging games which ended within a ten point difference. Junior T. M. Nuckols, an important reserve in the Tiger Machine, observed that "in many of the close games that we lost, the determining factor seemed to be the size advantage of the other team."

The team began the year on a positive note by winning the Rebel Invitational Tournament. During the first half of the season, they amassed a record of 7 wins and 3 losses. The triple overtime victory a Benedictine highlighted this streak. The team finished the season sixth in the Colonial District.

Captain Tim Legler led the team, the Colonial District, and the metro area in scoring despite facing special defenses designed to stop him. The area coaches voted Tim to the All-District and All-Metro teams. They also voted him Richmond Times Dispatch prep player of the year, and he shared Co-Most Valuable Player of the Colonial District with Pete Woolfolk of Jefferson-Huguenot-Wythe.

The year closed with the announcement of Mr. Ralph Crockett's retirement from coaching. Crockett stepped down after 22 years as the school's only varsity basketball coach.

Conference time. During a timeout, Coach Crockett points out the Tigers' mistakes and offers a new strategy to correct the weaknesses.

Walking on Air. Tim Legler clears the obstacles on his way to the basket against the Rebels. At the last moment the two teams agreed to switch the game sites so that retiring Coach Ralph Crockett's last home game could be played against arch-rival Douglas Freeman.

Battling the Cadets. Senior Ken Campbell takes the ball inside against Benedictine's Curtis Irby. As the second leading scorer on the team, Campbell got most of his points close to the basket.

Up for two. Senior John Pollok pulls up for a jump shot at the foul line. Although John rarely shot, he often guarded the best offensive player on the opposing team, and his defensive techniques usually kept that player under his average.

Long shot. Sophomore Stephen Rhudy takes the outside jump shot scoring for the Tigers. The Henrico defender was unsuccessful in blocking the shot.

Take it up. Coach Rodney Jones gives the Junior Varsity squad a half-time pep talk. The talk proved helpful as the Tigers finished the game with a victory over Freeman.

On the drive. Freshman Richie Rollings moves the ball inside as he prepares to pass it to a teammate in a home game. Freeman went on to defeat the ninth grade team 32-46.

Too tough

Tension ran high and tempers flared during the Junior Varsity basketball game against Douglas reeman. Receiving numerous injuries throughout he season, Stephen Rhudy found that this game vas no exception. An opponent's elbow caused an ye injury. While Stephen agonized on the bench, eshman James and Freeman player Steve ranklin began their own fight. It took coaches, eammates and officials to separate the two and estart the game. Without Stephen and James in he rest of the game, the Tigers lost.

Learning to work together and maneuver the ball, the Ninth Grade and Junior Varsity Basketball Teams practiced at odd times. The freshmen met at school at 7:00 a.m. to practice before school. They also drilled on Saturdays. The J.V. team practiced from 6:00 to 8:00 p.m. each night. Despite their spirit and enthusiasm the team's lack of size kept them from defeating the powerhouse teams such as Jefferson-Huguenot-Wythe and Highland Springs. Leading the J.V. Tigers in offense, Stephen Rhudy demonstrated speed agility and high scoring. Brennan Marilla and Keith Seiler helped out defensively.

King of pain. Sophomore Doug Girvin puts a move on his opponent, leaving him powerless in this match. Performances such as this helped Doug make it to the State Tournament.

Surging forth early in the season, the Varsity Wrestling team won six out of its first nine matches . . . Their luck changed though, as they stumbled and lost four at the end of the season.

According to Coach Jay Cox the team's record was not an accurate reflection of the wrestlers' willingness to work. "Practices were long and hard, but we knew the hours would pay off!" explained heavyweight Erick Ames. This prediction proved true, as Erick and four teammates qualified for the state meet. Seniors Doug Baber, Timmy Cassell and Rob Stanley and sophomore Doug Girvin travelled to northern Virginia to compete. "If anybody would have told me I'd have five people in the state tournament at the beginning of the season I'd tell them that they were crazy." commented Coach Cox. Erick's contributions to the team earned him the title of Most Valuable Player.

Leap frog. Starting off from the traditional position, senior Chris Brooks attempts to gain control of the match from the beginning. The move worked and Chris defeated his opponent.

Make a move on me. Senior Doug Baber puts his opponent in a painful position which enabled him to win the match.

Hercules Jr. Putting his opponent in an asfiyxiating head lock, senior Timmy Cassell attempts to finish off the kill. Timmy's performances proved consistent, and he went on to the State Tournament in Fairfax.

Flying high. Accompanied by the theme song to Hill Street Blues, freshman Mary Catherine Skammer performs her floor routine in which she received a score of 6.8. Mary Catherine's other areas included vaulting and beam work.

I'll tumble for you. Junior Jessie Whitten executes her floor exercises to the song "Memories." She scored an 8.0 against Freeman and competed in the State Meet as well.

Most Valuable Player. Senior Julie Freeman led the team in scoring and was named Best All-Around in the Central Region for four consecutive years.

Concentration. At the home meet against Lee-Davis, junior Catherine Sullivan completes her uneven parallel bars routine. She also competed in vaulting, floor exercises and on the beam.

Reach. Junior April Yoder balances carefully on the beam, h
main event in competition. April's performance throughout t season allowed her to participate in the Regional Meet.

Notable triumphs

To provide an incentive for members of the gymnastics team, the coaches created the winners' circle displaying the participants' names and their accomplishments on the gymnasium wall. In order to achieve this honor each girl had to score a 7.0 in a meet, receive a second or third place, or show improvement in a meet. "We're not out to win or lose, we only want to have fun, and our progress is based mainly on improvement," stated Coach Dick Anthony. He and Patrice King, a physical education teacher at Tuckahoe Middle School, coached the team and helped each member work towards her potential.

Besides working toward a winning record for the team, individual girls also finished the season with personal acheivement. Senior Julie Freeman, the team's leading scorer, received the Central Region All-Around title for the fourth year in a row, becoming the first person to reach this goal. In spite of her record Julie could not compete in the State Meet because of an eye injury. Junior Jesse Whitten's performance during the season qualified her for the Regional Meet where she received a second place for balance beam and fifth for floor exercises.

Frankly Speaking. Waiting for their event to begin, Julie Freeman, Mary Beth Lynch and April Yoder catch up on the latest gossip. April's stuffed tiger, which she used to hold her jewelry while competing, became the team mascot.

Rainy season

A cold early start prepared the Junior Varsity Tigers for a long season. Practice began February 20 to organize and prepare the Tigers for 12 scheduled matches, four more than the previous year. During the pre-season, they scrimmaged the Godwin Eagles as well as the varsity team. Rainy weather postponed the first three games causing them to fall behind schedule before they ever started.

As the season progressed changes in the lineups occurred. Varsity goalkeeper Taylor Farmer moved down to J.V. level to help stregthen the Tiger defense. Former goalies Hymie Genderson and Joel Curnell moved to defensive positions. Leading the offensive, Steve Burton scored 5 goals for the season. Burton scored twice in the Patrick Henry game while Ricky Taylor also made a goal, giving the Tigers a 3-1 win over the Patrick Henry Patriots. This victory gave them third place in the district. Coach Ed Poole stated "I am very happy with the amount of output and execution that I have see this year." Joel added, "It has been an excitin learning experience for me and I enjoyed being part of the team."

Using preseason practices as a time for learnin and building team spirit, the Varsity soccer tear scrimmaged the alumni team and the Godwi Eagles. Although they lost these games, Coac Hoskins stated, "We developed a better passin technique and more team effort," Junior Erick Ame and senior Steve Broaddus as captain of the tear led the defense, and gave all opposing winge and ball carriers a fight for possession of the ball.

As the defense forced the ball up, the wings i the offense took control. Juniors Walied Mahmou and Rahmin Alimard not only scored points, but aic ed in passing and manuevering past opposin defenders. Finishing 5-3 in regular season play, th Tigers earned a chance to go to districts.

Most Valuable Player. The team voted Steve as Most Valuable Player. He received this award for leading the team in goals as well as overall offensive and defensive performance.

Keeping in touch. In sophomore Annette Baird wearily hands over the baton, freshman Michelle Jones prepares to sprint ahead. Annette and Michelle composed just part of the 800 meter relay team which competed in the regional meet.

The Bionic Woman. Junior Kim Angevine concentrates on maintaining a steady pace as she finishes the race. Kim's endurance and stamina proved invaluable to the team as she broke the second best record for the 1600 meter race.

And they're off

Bang! The gun went off and the runners began their race. As the adrenalin started to flow and heir hearts began to pound, the runners rounded he first bend and sprinted into the straightaway. ach athlete knew that she must push herself to the mit to meet her goal, and only those who exerted hemselves both mentally and physically could chieve those goals. Although pain and exhaustion ccompanied the final strides, strong will and deter- hination helped the runner to cross the finish line vith pride.

While the coaches emphasized the importance f competing as a team, many girls worked on heir own to obtain personal goals. Junior Jenny alan, participating in the high jump and the urdles, became top scorer on the team and com- eted in the Regional and State meets. Senior Robin Crowder, who held the second position on the team, competed in the 100, 200, and 400 meter sprints and the long jump. Robin also became the first person in the school's history to win all three sprint races against Highland Springs. Leading the team in the 1600 meter race, junior Kim Angevine demonstrated her ability by achieving a time of 5:38.6, the second best in school history.

Coach Bert Stewart commented, "This year we were more competitive in the sprint races, but we improved in all areas as the season wore on." The 800 meter relay team which consisted of sophomore Annette Baird, senior Robin Crowder, and freshmen Monica Davis and Michelle Jones, competed in the Regional meet but could not qualify for the State meet in Charlottesville.

Most Valuable Player. Senior Robin Crowder became the first person in the school's history to win the 100, 200 and 400 meter sprints against Highland Springs. She also participated in the long jump.

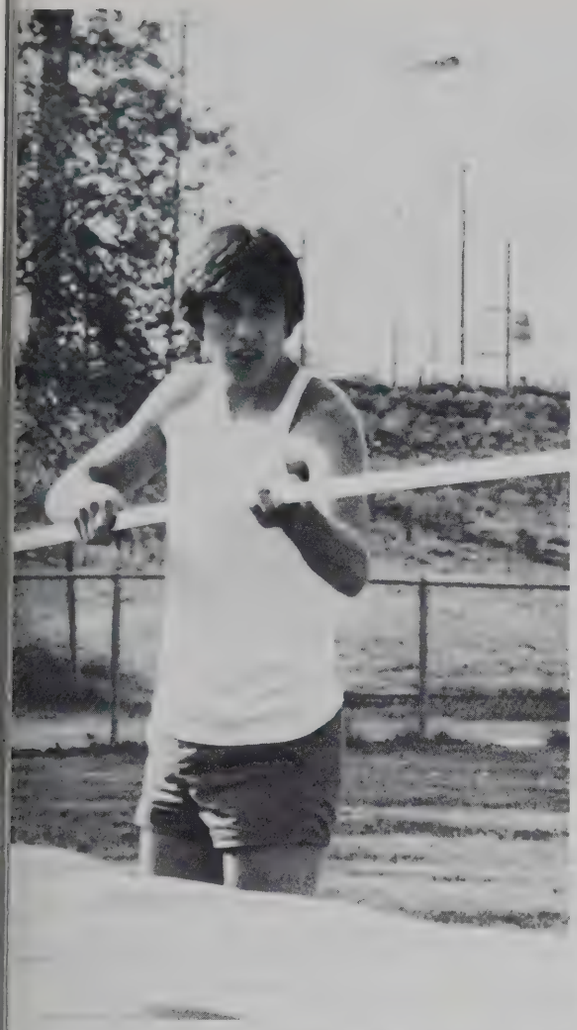
Up, up and away. Displaying her strength, freshman Cathy Eunice attempts to break her personal record in the long jump. Cathy actively competed in field events.

Going the distance

Intense workouts after school during the spring proved that practice paid off the Boys' Track Team. The team worked together to increase speed and durability and to revive competitiveness. During the meet at Freeman both schools remained tied until the last event. "It finally came down to the mile relay race and we put our best men in. That one event won the entire meet for us," Scott Germain proclaimed.

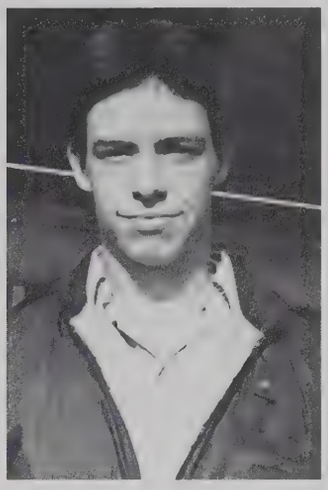
The 800-meter relay team which consisted of sophomore Alan Barr, John Darnell, James Dameron and senior Eduardo Carabano broke the school record set two years ago with a time of 1:32.8. The 800-meter relay team did well enough to compete in the Regional Meet. Sophomore Des Procter, who later became the team's Most Valuable Player and Scorer, qualified for the Regional and State meets. Des earned most of his points by running the 1600-meter race. Junior John Cutchin proved an asset to the team as he qualified for the Regional Meet in the pole vaulting. In discus throwing, seniors Danny Brown and Tommy Jackson qualified for both Regional and State meets also.

Tarzan. With a concentrated effort, junior Ricky Sherdel rushes to the bar. For Ricky, pole vaulting proved the most exciting event.



High goals. Setting up the bar again, sophomore Brennan Marilla prepares to try for a higher jump in practice.

Who stole the Gatoraid? Coach Dick Anthony anxiously awaits an answer from a team member while the rest of the team casually avoids his question. Gatoraid and other types of thirst quenchers seemed to become a necessity during the continuously increasing temperatures of the season.



Most Valuable Player. The track team voted sophomore Des Procter to this position because of his achievements in the long-distance events. He placed fourteenth in the State Meet in the 1600-meter run with a time of 4:29.0.

Here's the beef. Members of the team take time to rest after an extensive workout and listen to Coach Ryan's advice concerning the upcoming meet.

Jammed. Trying to keep the ball in play, sophomore Chris Pineno contorts his body to make a good forehand return. Chris usually played a serve and volley game; therefore, baselining made him uncomfortable.

Smash. Junior Richard Briggs gets ready for an overhead after forcing his opponent to lob on a well-placed approach shot. Richard went on to win the match in straight sets, 6-2, 6-2.

Out of position. Junior Bret McFee stretches to reach a shot wide to his forehand turning a potential winner for his opponent into a point for himself. Brett showed his skill by ranking number one on the ladder for the second year in a row.

Child's play

Placing second in district competition, the Boys' Varsity Tennis Team finished the season with one of the best records in the team's history, seven wins and only one loss. This success surprised Coach Jane Selden because the team consisted mainly of younger players. "They were less experienced and younger than previous teams," commented Coach Selden, "but they were just plain better." For example, two freshmen, Kevin Navin and Todd Lenland, made the starting lineup.

Senior Tony Witte and junior Brett McFee reflected the team's success in the district tournaments held at Freeman. They both made it to the quarter-finals in singles competition and to the semi-finals as a doubles team. "We could have done better if we hadn't made so many errors," commented Tony on their loss to the Highland Springs team. They lost in a disappointing third set tiebreaker after splitting the first two sets, 6-4, 4-6, 7-6 (7-3).

Tryouts for the team began in February. Braving the cold and other winter elements, perspective members qualify by playing in a round-robin tournament. The 12 players with the best records made the team. Out of these 12 another round-robin determined each player's seed on the ladder. The players changed their rankings by playing challenge matches throughout the season. Brett captured the top seed for the second consecutive season. He and Tony, the number two player, paired up to form the top-seeded doubles team.

The team voted Tony as Most Valuable Player. He commented that, "We never would have done so well if everybody hadn't have had so much support from everyone else." Feeling that Brett deserved recognition for his continuing performance, Coach Selden presented him with the Coach's Award. Brett became the first player in the squad's history to receive such an award. In addition, Kevin Motley received the Most Spirited Award at the Spring Sports Banquet.

You can do it! Coach Jane Selden gives advice and encouragement to junior Richard Briggs before a tense match. "Her pep talks really helped us pull through some of our rougher matches," commented Richard.

Playing the fiel

Concentrating on defense the Varsity Softball team defeated Freeman by holding on to their early lead and preventing runs from being scored. According to Ms. Pat Brown, "The defense meant as much in that game as in any." The team pulled together their defensive plays in the early part of the season while batting remained the major drawback. Another drawback occurred with the injury of the team's number one pitcher, sophomore, Gail Kibler. However, freshman Sharon Proffitt took over the pitching task while sophomore Christine Kibler filled Gail's position at second base and gradually developed into a defensive second baseman.

Two returning seniors Beth Edwards and Meg Powell added experience to the team. Beth was selected for the first team All Colonial District as outfielder, while Meg was chosen as catcher for t second team All Colonial District. Their leadership fluenced the other players helping them to i prove their skills.

"In a way, I was disappointed that we play five or six games that could have gone either wa and we lost them," admitted Coach Brown. W three games left to play, the team had achieve 9-4 record. The team lost these games by a total four runs, and Ms. Brown claimed, "We play great defense but failed to hit." However, the tea maintained a positive attitude despite the loss and earned fifth place in the district with a record 9-7.

Talk it up. Sophomore Christine Kibler encourages her teammate at bat. Christine played second base after her sister Gail received an injury.

A pow-wow. Coach Brown makes encouraging comments to the team, helping them maintain a positive attitude throughout the season.

Fielding a ground ball, sophomore Esther Raskind prepares to make a play. Her efforts helped the team to defeat Freeman.

Most Valuable Player. Beth Edwards played four years on the Softball Team, serving as co-captain during her senior year. She obtained a batting average of .298 and her teammates voted her Most Valuable Player.

The naturals

Ending the year with a record of 22-2, the Varsity baseball team came within one game of capturing their fifth state title. The loss came against a strong hitting Halifax team with the Tigers bowing 5-4.

Starting off early in the season, head coach Ronnie Atkins found a pleasant surprise in sophomore Mike Milchin. Mike played junior varsity last year before seeing some action with the varsity. As a sophomore, his powerful hitting earned him a starting position and much acclaim among rival coaches.

The designated hitter and co-captain for the team emerged as a powerful batter. "If Luke Reid made contact with the ball it was gone," commented junior teammate Scott Young. According to coach Atkins, Steve O'Donnell surprised a lot of people too. Senior Albert Gayle received a knee injury early in the season. Steve stepped in and proved a good fielder as well as a consistent hitter. Hard hitting Tony Haney, a fourth year varsity team member received the honor of Most Valuable Offensive Player. Another strength lay in the Tiger pitchers. Starting pitcher Chris Garrett posted a 9-1 record with his only loss coming in the Halifax game. Chris also possessed the best E.R.A. for the team and thus his teammates voted him as the Most Valuable Player. Shawn Llewellyn, also a starting pitcher, relied on his curve ball which proved very effective during the regular season. Relief came usually from other players filling in, but the surprise at that position evolved from hard-throwing junior Steve Gordon. For his efforts at third base, Tim Legler was named Most Valuable Defensive Player.

swinging single. Up to bat, senior Luke Reid manages to get to first base. Luke, who played on the varsity team for three years as catcher and designated hitter, made several homeruns.

Most Valuable Player. Junior Chris Garrett's pitching record of 9-1 helped him earn this title. He also had the highest E.R.A. on the team.

Back to basics

Two close wins over Lee-Davis and a victory over Douglas Freeman in the final game of the season allowed the Junior Varsity Baseball Team to finish their season with a 16-2 record and the district championship. The team relied on "good fundamental baseball, commitment and team comaraderie," according to Coach Neil Malakoff. He emphasized that the players cooperated and "knew they had to do certain things to win."

The first four batters in the lineup, Richie Scharff, Bob Barber, Keith Seiler, and Doug Girvin, "carried us most of the year," pointed out Coach Malakoff. Keith and another sophomore, Kenny Bengal also provided steady starting pitching. Coach Malakoff also added, "The freshman pitchers, particularly Robbie Brunel, and Tommy Jenkins, really came through for us." The season proved that dedication and a little elbow grease could overcome inexperience and "a lack of great talent."

Most Valuable Players. Bob Barber hit .459, Doug Girvin hit .367, Richie Scharff hit .407 and Keith Seiler hit .396. These sophomores acted as team leaders and were called up to the varsity team at the end of the year.

Catch that "bwall." Imitating Coach Neil Malakoff, sophomore Dung Winh yells this familiar quote to sophomore Doug Girvin. Because of Doug's skill, Coach Ron Atkins called him up to the Varsity Team.

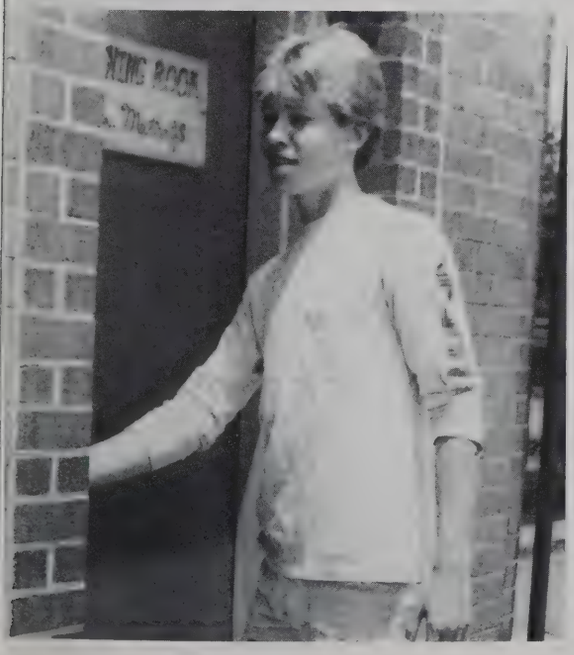
Painkillers

Housing miles of athletic tape the training room became the most popular spot on campus at 3:30 p.m. As the different sports teams dressed out for practice certain athletes became regular visitors to Coach Greg Metcalf and his staff.

Students who needed to use ice packs or the whirlpool or wanted their injuries taped before practices and games went to see Coach Metcalf and his assistant Miss Edie Ellis. As they dispensed supplies they also gave advice on injury prevention and therapy. During seventh period each day sophomores Chris Phelps and Jamie Tucker also worked in the training room. Football, wrestling and soccer players became the most frequent users of the facility, but athletes in all other areas also found it beneficial having an athletic trainer at the school every day.

Does this hurt? Student trainer Chris Phelps tapes Susan James' wrist. Although Susan did not participate on an athletic team she found the trainers helpful in taking care of other injuries.

Hot stuff. Pulling the hydroculator pad out of the heater Chris Phelps prepares to heat another spring athlete. Muscle strain proved a common ailment among athletes of all sports.



In training. To help a strained muscle, injured in soccer practice, sophomore Jeff Lockhard heads for the Training Room. Coach Greg Metcalf and his assistants patched up Jeff and others who needed their help.

As students matured and discovered more about themselves and their personal needs, the found their niche in the school program. They contributed their strengths and took advantage o the school's offerings to improve their weaknesses. No matter what the individual's area o concentration, there was something for everyone i

Academics and Organization

Individual contributions, regardless of their size, took on greate significance when viewed in context with those of the classmates. Working toward a common goal led to an increc ed spirit of cooperation and responsibility. Students quick realized that the success of any project depended upon the e tent of their personal committment.

Demonstrating this sense of dependability, the yearbook staff found a hom away from home in room 15, where they spent Friday nights and hot summe days working to meet their deadlines. They hoped to continue the winning trac tion and earn another trophy rating. Also receiving recognition for their effort the Future Homemakers of America won an Outstanding Chapter Awar Representing the Future Business Leaders of America, freshman Becky Andersc placed first in the Entrepreneurship Event at the State Leadership Conference.

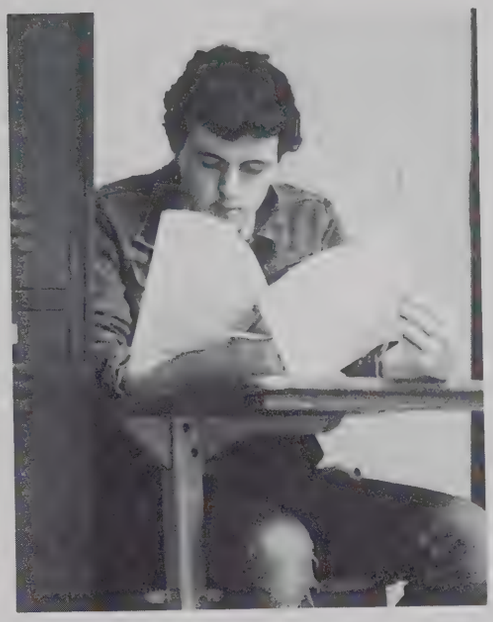
Taking a closer look at the purpose and functions of campus organization Assistant Principal Mr. Bruce Dickens worked with sponsors and officers to create more effective schedule of fund raising activties. With fewer students on campu clubs without sufficient membership disbanded, allowing students to devote the time and evergy to more active organizations.

Academically, the reduction in the size of the student body had little effect. Th number of class offerings actually addition with the addition of honors and a vanced placement courses. As a member of an upper level science class, junic Sherry Edwards had the opportunity to enter the essay contest sponsored by th Richmond Joint Engineering Council. Sherry placed third in the Richmond are winning $50 which she received at the Council's annual dinner at the Hyatt House Other Tigers receiving recognition for their individual accomplishments include National Merit Scholarship Finalists Leland Tsao and Robert Stanley.

Limitations in size proved no hindrance to the diversity of the total school pr gram. Regardless of the educational needs of the student population, classes pr vided for individual differences.

Teamwork. All of the chorus groups join together for their last preformance, graduation. Keeping with tradition, they sang "You'll Never Walk Alone."

Interior Decorating. Renovating the inside of their lockers, freshmen girls plaster pictures of good-looking guys on the door. Students used photographs and bumper stickers to add a personal touch.



Checking it twice. Looking over his work, junior Timmy McLaughlin corrects mistakes before turning in his test. Teachers in Building Ten often gave make-ups in the halls so they did not have to interrupt classtime.

Little boy blew. Junior David Wilson puts all of his energy into his trumpet solo. The marching band travelled to competitions in Virginia, North Carolina and Georgia capturing top awards.

Band Atten hut! Standing at attention, junior Kelly Shea awaits the command to exit the gym after a pep rally. The band played at all pep rallies to build enthusiasm among the student body.

Leader of the band. Drum Major Mundy Viar rehearses the company front from the opening song. During marching season the band met at 7:00 a.m. to practice their halftime show.

Pep Talk. After dressing, band members wait to march into the stadium to perform at a home football game. Since the arrival of director Mr. Frank Chlorie, a renewed motivation hit the band, enabling the organization to win more awards.

Don't Rush! Junior Chris Mize rehearses his tritomb portion of the percussion solo. The band featured the drummers in an arrangement of a medley of songs by the group Rush.

Visual Aids. To add excitement of their performance, Mr. Chlorie used his cymbol players to enhance the percussion solo. He also had drummers wear mirrored sunglasses and tape their sticks. These special effects helped the drumline win first place awards during the marching season.

Grand opening

Energy and excitement filled the air as the Tiger Marching Band entered the field. The cheering died down, and the drum majors executed their salute to the home stands. As the drummers hit the first beat, and the music surged forth, applause shattered the momentary silence. The show included crowd pleasers such as the head chop routine and solos by juniors Gail Wilda and David Wilson.

Having two drum majors on the field added pizazz to the show. Seniors Eric Thome and Mundy Viar coordinated their styles to form a single performance. Mundy remarked, "Working under another new director added more originality and ideas, as well as excitement.

Coordinating a show with two drum majors proved one of the fresh ideas of Mr. Frank Chlorie, the third band director since the departure of Mr. Tom Shook in 1981. Under Mr. Chlorie's direction, the band sold fruit, raffle tickets, candy bars and sponsored the Maynard Ferguson concert held in the gym on March 19. These fundraising activities generated the money to finance new uniforms, summer band camp and the trip to Atlanta on April 12-15.

After the arrival of Mr. Chlorie, band members attended more competitions and won more awards. At the North Stafford competition the band took second place in drumline, hornline and overall. The drums placed first at the Tidewater Festival of Bands while the band won third place overall. At the Cary Band Day the Tigers placed second in their division, and first runner up to Grand Champion band of the competition. Another change attributed to a new band director included a better attitude regarding participation.

Dress blues

Clad in two different shades of blue, the Wind Ensemble made its initial appearance of the year in the annual Christmas concert along with the jazz and concert bands. The Jazz Band also dressed for the occasion, wearing black pants, white shirts and red bow-ties.

The Barnum orchestra also wore appropriate costumes. Since the orchestra performed on stage for the first time in a musical, costume coordinator Mrs. Debbie Owens dressed them accordingly. Their circus-style outfits consisted of silver derbys, royal blue vests, patriotic arm bands and white shirts and pants.

New outfits also added to the Wind Ensemble's concert appearance. The girls wore royal blue formals and the guys dressed in dark pants and ties. The Wind Ensemble went to Festival at Henrico High School with Grade VI music, the hardest level. They received a II, or Excellent.

At the Solo and Ensemble Festival sophomore Caralee Rooks competed under Grade VI and received a I, or Superior. Individual students from all three bands participated in All-Regional Band, and Allen Hall went on to the All-State.

To complete the year, Director Mr. Frank Chlorie held the Annual Band Banquet where he installed new officers and announced drum majors and colorguard captains. Parents and peers listened as each group performed different selections from the spring repertoire.

The final countdown. With the exception of the seniors, band members perform the traditional processional Pomp and Circumstance. They also played the alma mater and a differnt type of recessional, a tune by Chuck Mangione.

We got the beat! Sophomore Seth Harris plays the cadence as the pep band marches out at the end of a pep rally. The pep band performed at basketball games and at winter pep rallies to boost enthusiasm for the team.

Hot stuff. Battling the heat, freshman Kim Short realizes the demanding schedule that membership on the flag squad requires. The group practiced twice a week during the summer to learn basic marching skills.

Who can it be?

Surprise gifts of cards, candy and stuffed animals found in lockers or homerooms often brightened the day for bandfront members. Secret pals who waited until spring to reveal themselves gave treats on days of games, competitions and for holidays. Freshman Shari Bernstein remarked, "My secret pal was great! I really enjoyed having one because it made me feel like part of the group."

Setting aside the fun times for more serious undertakings, bandfront members met every morning at 7:00 and Tuesdays and Thursdays after school to work on their routines. The colorguard and rifles designed the routines using maneuvers they practiced all summer. Some of the members attended the Mid-Atlantic Band Camp at Ferrum College to refine their skills further and learn more moves. The hours of work helped the 23-member flag squad and 7-member rifle squad earn two trophies each.

Also bringing home awards from competitions, the majorettes won five trophies during the marching season. At Cary Band Day in Cary, North Carolina, the five girls left the competition with the Grand Champion trophy, surpassing 49 other squads.

After the regular season, members from each squad joined forces to choreograph a flag and dance routine to the song "Electricity." They performed at pep rallies and home basketball games wearing brightly colored sweat suits.

Later in the year on April 12-15, the entire band traveled to Atlanta, Georgia. They competed in the Six Flags Over Georgia band competition, after which they spent a free evening at the amusement park. They also took one day for a sightseeing tour of the city and attended a concert by jazz trumpeter Dizzy Gillespie.

Cheers

Excitement built as the cheerleaders prepared for their first pep rally of the season. Along with the band members, they arrived early to stretch out and get in last minute practice. A highlight of each pep rally became the competition between the classes for the spirit award. Val Cameron, captain of the varsity squad, disclosed, "We added the spirit basketball to keep up the enthusiasm."

During the summer vacation, the three squads practiced twice a week. These sessions continued throughout the school year in order to learn new mounts and cheers for games and pep rallies. At least one of the sponsors attended each practice to critique the cheers and spot on all mounts. Mrs. Lois Mays, Mrs. Kathy Rock and Ms. Camille Thomas gave the girls tips on how to perfect their moves.

After developing their own techniques, the varsity squad travelled to Virginia Randolph to teach cheers to the special education students. "It was a great feeling working with this group. We all learned a lot from the experience," commented junior Kelley Marrin. The ninth grade and varsity squads cheered in the stands during the Virginia Randolph-Amelia Street basketball game, which took place in the gymnasium. The varsity cheerleaders joined the Virginia Randolph group for a cheer at half-time.

During the fall, the J.V. and ninth grade squads alternated cheering at girls' basketball gam and J.V. football gam In addition, the squ prepared tags for teams. Throwing a pc in Cafeteria 2, the var squad honored the fc ball players and coac before the Freem game.

Change of key

Although different in some ways, rs. Anne Regan's new oproaches to teaching d not deviate entirely om those of previous ears. After attending a onductors' workshop at he Eastman School of usic in Rochester, New ork, she returned to hool with ways to reach ew goals. The obvious hanges in the depart- ent consisted of more emands on students for ttention and effort and ew ideas for exercises, rganization of classtime nd learning music. The horisters had homework, novelty, in the form of umbering the measures f their music. Each student had a calendar charting which songs they would rehearse, on which days and for how long. Class started every day with breathing and chord-building exercises and a five-minute massage session. Occasionally Mrs. Regan broke away from the practice regimen and the classes listened to and critiqued tapes of their concerts or recordings of songs they planned to perform.

Aside from these adjustments, the song remained the same in the choral department. The Novettes, Sounds Unlimited, Ninth Grade Girls' Chorus and Concert Choir sang at places around town including the Lions' Club, the Acca Temple, the Thomas Jefferson Junior Women's Club, Regency Square, area retirement homes and the Jewish Community Center. In addition, the department held Fall, Winter and Spring Concerts at school and, as in the past two years, went on a trip in the spring. The choirs performed in Silver Spring, Maryland and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Margaret Short, a Novette, recollected the fun she had on the trip. "In Maryland we sang for the choral department at a high school and then they sang for us. It was so much fun to learn about all the different things their department was doing." Also, the individual choirs participated in the Choral Festival at Henrico High School in March.

By auditioning, 11 students took part in the District I Regional Chorus. Mitch Weisiger attended the Virginia All-State Chorus; Lisa Pennington served as alternate. Maureen Hershman and Lisa represented the school in the Virginia Music Educators' Association Honors Choir. All of the choral students sang in the All-County Chorus. To honor recipients of musical awards and to recognize the achievements of the students, the first annual choral banquet took place on May 8. "I wanted to do something nice for the really hard-working students. I also wanted to give some joke awards such as 'most likely to sing off key' and 'most likely to wear the wrong outfit,'" Mrs. Regan commented.

New ideas employed by Mrs. Regan compared to variations on a theme. She retained some policies and procedures, while experimenting with the new. This resulted in forward motion, keeping with Mrs. Regan's philosophy, "Never settle for mediocrity."

Good Night, Saigon." Sophomore Mike Snapp earn a standing ova- on for this performance on the Fall Concert. Students auditioned to ng solos on the concerts throughout the year.

Show and tell

Lending a hand early in the year, the Student Council Association organized Orientation Day for the rising freshmen. Twelve girls and 12 boys from the Senior Class, chosen as Big Brothers and Big Sisters, paired up and went to freshman homerooms during the first week of school to answer questions. As the year progressed, the SCA sponsored fundraising events. Despite losing the annual spirit link contest to Freeman, they managed to involve students in the competition while raising money in the process. The Valentine's Day carnation sale yielded high profits inspiring other clubs to do the same. Besides using traditional fundraisers, the SCA started a new one. The organization made helium balloons available to students who then attached cards with their names and addresses. The student whose balloon flew the farthest won a Sony Walkman.

In addition to making money, the SCA also cooperated with the Richmond Metropolitan Blood Service in conducting the annual blood drive. Homeroom representatives took the names of those interested in donating blood. The overwhelming response caused the drive to continue for two days.

D.E.C.A. members olding jobs attended the mployee-Employer Banquet in the spring. Students who took part in District Competition earlier in the year received their awards at the annual event held at Regency Inn. The recipients competed in contests related to job skills at the Competition held at Regency Square on February 8. The winners went on to state and national levels.

Preparing students for their role in the future the Vocational Industrial Clubs of America also competed in District and State Competitions relating to occupations. The contests challenged students in the areas of skill and leadership. The members also attended a banquet in honor of their employers. Sponsor Mr. Strickland found that teaching only one period a day made it difficult to organize activities.

Any interested students taking a business class could join Future Business Leaders of America. Members sold Current stationery to help cover their $5.00 dues. The chapter strove to maintain its gold seal of merit, an honor which only the top FBLA organizations in Virginia received.

Individual members received their own honors. Michele Anderson held the office of regional secretary. At the FBLA regional competition, students tested their business skills, where Stephanie Messler placed first in grammar review and Becky Anderson placed first in entrepreneurship. Overall, the club received seven awards including second most outstanding chapter out of 40 schools.

Throughout the year, the club involved itself in different types of activities. By selling tickets to the fall play The Mousetrap and the spring musical Barnum, members used their business background as they gained experience handling money. During the winter holidays, members and sponsors gathered at Bonanza for a party, enabling them to get to know each other better. Later in the year they sold boxes of candy to raise money for ASK, the association of the study of childhood cancer.

Trick or treat! After a horror-filled night at the Mummy's Tomb, FBLA members unwind at Friendly's. Junior Cindy Noblett relaxes with a glass of water while senior Kim Smith feasts on an ice cream sundae.

The first slice! As her first official duty as President, senior Lesley Tate helps herself to a piece of cake. After installation of officers, FBLA held a reception for club members and their parents.

Take care

Monthly themes falling under one large theme, The Sky is not the Limit, aided the Future Homemakers of America in programming for the year. The organizations's presentation at Freshman Orientation involved the Care Bear theme informing new students of the opportunity to find friends in FHA. The members sponsored the annual Homecoming fashion show in which students from all the Home Economics classes and Homecoming Princesses participated. Group effort and cooperation earned FHA second place for their float, The Tiger Fighter.

For Thanksgiving the club organized a children's food drive. FHA representatives supplied each homeroom with a decorated box and urged each person to bring canned goods to school. Sponsoring a Career Day in the library, the organization prepared displays of different areas of employment. This program gave students a chance to find out about possible career choices. FHA compiled a display for Curriculum Day and participated in an aerobic class. In addition, the organizatrion entered in a bake-off contest with Freeman and attended a spring rally held at Hermitage.

Unlike the FHA, the Science Ecology Club concentrated on one project for the majority of the year. The club planned on continuing their annual tradition of contributing stone benches. In order to raise the necessary money, they held an aluminum drive allowing them to increase the treasury and to donate three benches to the school. Members collected as much aluminum as possible and received help from the Forest Heights Garden Club, the community sponsor of SEC.

The SEC also concentrated on making students and faculty aware of their environment. They prepared displays on Virginia's resources of air, water, land, wildlife and pepole. During the Keep Henrico Beautiful Week, members of SEC designed handouts to bring attention to the importance of helping to keep the county clean. One hundred and twenty-two students came out to clean the campus, vacant lots and surrounding roads.

Quiet riot

Shreiks of relief rang out all over the ampus as members of he Keyettes ended their renuous day of silence. fter seven hours of parcipation in the no-talk-a-hon the girls talked conuously all the way ome. Members of the ub asked family and iends to sponsor them in his event, which helped aise funds for needy amilies.

This service club also emonstrated its ability o aid the community by evising a program for lmost every special ocasion. In order to cheer up children recuperating from illnesses, on Halloween the Keyettes visited Saint Mary's Hospital and brought the youngsters small gifts and candy. During the month of December, they donated money to the Henrico County Christmas Mother and planned a party of their own to celebrate the holidays.

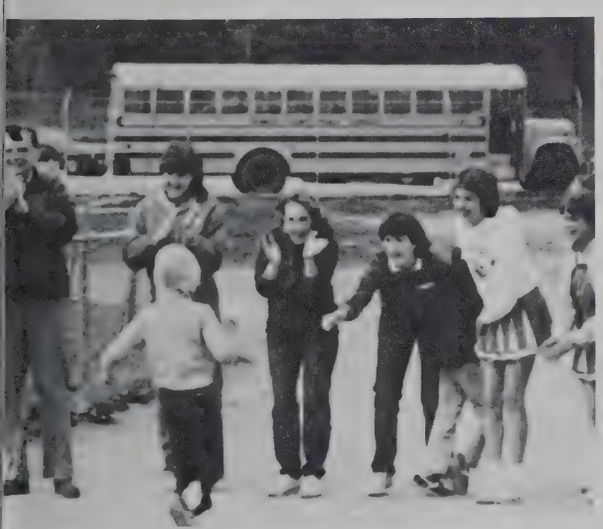
Y-Teens, the other girls' service club, also celebrated Christmas and Easter. For Easter the members distributed baskets filled with candy to children at Saint Joseph's Villa helping with arts and crafts. "The kids were so easy to get along with. Even though they were supposed to be problem children, they had fun and cooperated very well." stated junior Kim Wells.

In contrast, the members also traveled to Camelot Hall Nursing Home. Once a month the girls played Bingo with the residents and just spent time visiting and talking with them.

Cleaning up after football and basketball games constituted one of the Key Club's main responsibilities. The group stayed at school after the games to move bleachers, pick up trash and sweep the basketball court. The Key Club acted as a male service club, supporting the school and community. The guys helped with the Parent Teacher Association's azalea sale in April, unloading the plants from trucks.

A decline in membership led to a temporary disbanding of Hi-Y, Key Club's rival organization. Because of Hi-Y's inactivity, the annual basketball game between the two clubs did not take place.

All in favor. During the presidents' absence vice president Lori Specter presides over a lunchtime Y-Teens meeting. Club members volunteered to donate their time to make Easter favors for the children at St. Joseph's Villa.



Debris or not debris. After a home basketball game Key Club members Kevin Steele, Larry Soble and Eddie Perry help clean up the gymnasium. The service organization also helped keep the football stadium clean.

On the go

Stuffing necessary items into their luggage, Latin students Tim Hollandsworth, Susan Middlebrook and Kevin Williams dashed off for the State Latin Convention in October. Accompanied by Mrs. Jean Canfield, they participated in competitions involving arts and crafts, costumes, Latin oratory and academic tests. Students attended a toga banquet, a movie, seminars and heard speeches by candidates running for state offices.

In addition to this convention, the club members also took part in two certamens, competitions comparable to the Battle of the Brains program. The Latin II team participated in the Henrico Invitational Certamen at Henrico High School on March 24. Team members Tia Bain, Sherry Edwards, Phil Hinkley and Christine Kibler won second place in their area of competition.

While the Latin Club's efforts centered around competition, the American Field Services concentrated on making the three foreign exchange students feel at home in their new schools. AFS invited Lars Godzik, Marco Piekert and Mayumi Takaya to attend meetings throughout the year. Sponsors Mrs. Shirley Torstrick and Mrs. Ruby Neagle organized a Christmas card sale. Members donated the profits to a fund to finance a student's trip to Europe. President Val Cameron explained, "I believe AFS is an excellent program because it gives students the chance to explore other cultures."

Dealing with the German culture, sponsor Mrs. Joanne Opplinger organized a group of students interested in participating in German oriented programs. Due to Mrs. Opplingers half-day schedule, the club only held meetings before school. The organization used this time to make plans for the International Dinner and the foreign language Homecoming float.

Taste of culture

The aroma of apples, cherries, and blueberries filled the air. Chocolate and strawberries further enhanced the flavor of the French specialty. The sizzling of the thin pancakes tantalized the senses of the students as they spooned the fillings into the awaiting crepes and smothered them with mounds of whipped cream. The French club chose a crepe party as a means of sampling French cooking while the Spanish club ventured to the restaurant Chi Chi's to experience Mexican cuisine. Dishes such as enchiladas, tacos and quesadillas helped club members get a feel of Mexican culture.

President of the Spanish club, Jackie Lenzi commented, "With more support this year than in the past, we were able to participate in more activites." They helped spread the Christmas spirit by singing carols at University Park Nursing Home. To raise money the club sold doughnuts.

Busy with social and school affairs, the clubs mixed fun and foreign purpose in their activities. Together the language clubs prepared a homecoming float displaying the theme, "Meet, Greet, and Defeat!" chanted in Spanish, French, German and Latin.

Each club organized a meeting honoring foreign students who answered questions pertaining to their home country. Eduardo Carabano attended the Spanish Club meeting and the French Club invited Lars Godzik, Marco Piekert and Mayumi Takaya. In addition, both groups participated in the International Dinner.

Love connection

Crowds gathered in front of Building Ten as anxious students waited to purchase computer dating results. Forensics members put together and distributed questionnaires dealing with personality traits and preferences. The answers were sent to a computer company for processing, where it compiled lists of the 15 most compatible students. Results sold for $1.50.

Helping students to find the perfect match and selling candybars enabled the team to raise funds to participate in statewide competitions. Club members practiced in the mornings, during lunch and after school to perfect their abilities. They performed in several categories including Original Oratory, Extemporaneous Speaking, Dramatic Interpretation, Prose/Poetry and Multiple Reading. With the help of sponsor Ms. Therese Morse, students prepared for the big tournament, Mid-Atlantics, where junior Mark Jones placed third in Humourous Interpretation.

Corner hangout

Searching for innovative ways to capture the attention of 10 and 11 year olds, members of the Student Organization for Developing Attitudes spent free time reviewing books, files and films in their new work room. Located on the corner of Building Eight the room provided space for organizing materials. Lesson ideas dealt with friendship, prejudice, dating and other situations the children might face in middle and high school. Every two weeks teams consisting of two or three members visited elementary school to present their programs through role playing, class discussions or films.

SODA applicants, rising sophomores, juniors and seniors, completed a detailed and time consuming form. Sponsors Mrs. Susan Wiatt and Mrs. Emily Martin, basing their final decision on teacher recommendations, grades and character, reviewed each application and chose students that best demonstrated the ideals of SODA.

A workshop held in October enabled members to learn the importance of SODA to the fifth graders. Topics covered in the workshops ranged from communication, to self awareness, to class control.

SODA began as an organization to prevent drug abuse and developed into one which stressed importance of making proper decisions through developing strong attitudes and values. By exhibiting patience, understanding and knowledge, SODA members managed to uphold their creed, people helping people to care.

Under the weather

An assortment of colored slickers and umbrellas brightened the gloomy practice for the Homecoming Parade. Family members and friends watched while princesses and their escorts rehearsed the procession in the downpour. Under the instruction of Pep Club sponsor Mrs. Carlton Laskauskas, participants circled the track, practicing the route and pace which their floats would follow. Pep Club members helped drivers find their correct place in line, hoping to cut down on last minute confusion at the Homecoming game. Holding elections for class princesses, king and queen and organizing the week of events prior to the game comprised the club's major responsibilities.

Along with the Witness staff, the Pep Club raised money by selling the Men of '84 calendars. Mrs. Laskauskas emphasized the success of the sale; "We thought it went right well for the first year. Generally, the people that bought the calendars were girls and the guys in the calendar." The members also provided other services by serving the meal at the fall athletic banquet, painting posters for the band boosters concert and making tags for the soccer team.

Providing a different type of service for students, the Ti-Li Club stayed busy during study halls. Library aides completed daily procedures such as reshelving books and writing overdue notices. This also gave librarians Ms. Sue Stocks and Ms. Rachel Rowland more time to keep up with the inventory and work with students on research projects. Aides also rendered services such as stamping passes, helping students find magazines, microfilms and other materials and running errands for the librarians.

The library also served as the meeting place for the annual Coffee and Confections reception given by the Sociology Club for the teachers and staff on Parent Visitation Day. The members arranged the sweetheart Bazaar for Valentine Day. To promote th sale, they sold snacks ar hearts for the sweethea tree to earn money f their treasury. Safety in numbers

Unexpected notes arrived in homerooms as select students became informed of their eligibility to become an associate member of Mu Alpha Theta. These 25 students became prospective candidates for spring tappings and attended regular meetings. They did not have all of the privileges of regular members as they could not vote on national policies but did not have to pay dues either. Mu Alpha Theta, the national math society, honored those who excelled in math and kept a high grade point average in their other classes. These students attended meetings throughout the year where seniors took turns presenting math-related programs. Students tapped on May 3 attended a reception on May 7 with their parents. Mr. Ed Remington, general manager of data processing for Circuit City, delivered a speech about personal achievement and math-related careers.

Recognition did not only apply to academics. Publications had their own honor society, Quill and Scroll, for young journalists who worked above and beyond the call of duty and remained in the upper quarter of their class. On May 21, Witness, Gavel, and Hearing staffs congregated in the library to honor outstanding journalists and watch the induction of ten new members into Quill and Scroll. After the new members took the oath they attended a reception with their parents.

Students actively involved in plays by working at least 100 hours gained eligibility for the International Thespian Society. During the induction banquet at Western Sizzlin, guests awaited the tappings of the new members. Thespians busied themselves throughout the year by participating in a One-Act play, the fall drama, and the production of Barnum.

Honorable mention

On May 9, students filed into the gymnasium for the annual National Honor Society and Beta Club tappings assembly. These two clubs, organized on a national level, recognized high school juniors and seniors who maintained strong records academically and in extra-curricular activities.

The Beta tappings began with a speech by President Eric Thome about the symbols on the club emblem. Eric also explained that students must have at least a 2.80 grade point average to meet the eligibility requirements. Finally, all Beta Club members formed a line down the center aisle, then individually left the line to find the inductees. Each member tried to fool the students by walking around the gym before finally surprising a new member. After the tappings finished, all of the honored students took the oath together and sat down.

NHS tappings followed, commencing with a short speech by President Peggy Brown and brief descriptions by other members of the four qualities of character, scholarship, service and leadership. The society tapped students who exhibited these characteristics while maintaining a 3.50 or higher grade point average. After the ceremony finished, a reception for all members of both clubs and their parents took place in the library.

Beta and NHS split the cost of the reception and the flowers and candles for the assembly. To raise money for the tapping Beta, sponsored by M Steve Galyen, sol refreshments at eve home wrestling matc and NHS, sponsored b Mrs. Bea Dalton, pr vided a tutoring servi for which they charge $5.50 an hour. Do it again? Hearing Sponsor Mrs. M. J. Tolley instructs a student to rewrite lines of her story. Staff members discovered that the literature often needed several revisions before publication in order to insure accuracy and variety.

Use your imagination

Hoping to find their hidden literary talents, students struggled through essays and research papers for English and history classes. While most students dreaded assignments of this type, others discovered that creative writing served as an outlet for frustration and a personal means of expression. Two publications, the Hearing and the Gavel, allowed students to develop their talents and to turn their creativity into something the student body could appreciate.

The Hearing, the student literary magazine, contained poetry, prose and artwork. Under the guidance of Mrs. Mary Jane Tolley and Mrs. Sallie Hood, the 13 staff members reviewed submissions and organized the layout of the magazine. The theme, Interlocking the Arts, invited a variety of literary works. "The idea," stated Mrs. Tolley, "is quality, not quantity. This is the students' magazine, a chance to show their work."

Along with the magazine, Hearing staff members sold telephone books and Senior Prophecies. These endeavors assisted in raising money for the magazine's production. The staff issued the prophecies as separate pamphlets rather than in conjunction with the magazine as in the past. In order to boost sales, the Hearing joined the Witness during distribution. By issuing the two publications together, staff members conserved money and allowed themselves to print only as many magazines as already ordered.

While Hearing staff members utilized seventh period, students in Journalism I and II worked during sixth period to produce the Gavel. Although 18 students participated in the classes, sponsor Miss Trish Howland encouraged others to submit articles. Published once a month, the Gavel offered regular features such as the Tiger of the Month column and editorials. Teachers nominated deserving seniors for Tiger of the Month, and staff members voted on these suggestions. The Journalism curriculum required each student to write every section at least once. This enabled the Journalism students to learn different techniques. "We have so much work to do and so few members," commented Editor Terri Gowen, "but we always manage to get the job done."

Both the Gavel and the Hearing helped students develop their writing skills. Although both required spending time after school, Hearing Editor Jennifer Han felt that this paid off. "It's a very enriching experience," she stated, "and I'm so proud to see such talent!" Staff members agreed that the constructive criticism helped improve their own writing.

Collaboration. Literary Editor Tena Jamison and Editor Jennifer Han discuss a submission for the magazine. The staff selected the cover of the magazine as well as the interior by choosing color schemes and designs fitting the overall theme.

Judge a book by its cover

Surrounded by the natural beauty of the University of Richmond campus, members of the Witness staff briskly walked along a shady path toward the Commons Building. After arriving at their class, they listened to suggestions on improving copy and layout styles. Taylor Publishing Company, which sponsored this workshop on August 1-4, showed examples of the latest trends in yearbook publications. After a week of working on theme, copy, cover design and sample layout styles, each school presented its ideas to a panel of judges. In this judged presentation, the Witness placed first among commuting high schools. The workshop proved helpful to the staff since it allowed them to begin planning the new yearbook earlier than usual. "It was a big relief to come to school with so much of the preliminary work already done," remarked Editor-in-Chief Lisa Ettinger. Both the change of scenery and the excitement of winning an award acted as an incentive for the year.

The staff also attended the Virginia High School League's publication workshop at the University of Virginia on November 5-6. Here, they saw new ideas and techniques used in award-winning yearbooks. At the awards ceremony, the 1983 edition of the Witness won the highest honor given, a trophy class award.

Staff members worked in different areas toward a common goal of producing a high-quality yearbook. They often found themselves desperately trying to finish a copy and a layout before a deadline. These attempts usually meant remaining at school Friday nights, surrounded by food, music and yearbook work. As a result of these late Friday night deadlines both advisor Mrs. Anne Poates and the editors began to call the yearbook room their second home. Staff member Jack Taliferro remarked, "Mrs. Poates knows what she's doing and always makes the time to help us." Junior Kim Wells added, "She's dedicated to the yearbook, and she wants us to do our best."

Photographers worked to provide another vital component of the book by capturing the year on film. Students expected to see a familiar yearbook photographer on the scene taking pictures at every event. One photographer, junio Christy McGrew, demonstrated her dedication in even the toughest situations as she ran among footbal players to film the action After taking pictures photographers spen hours in the darkroom developing and printing them.

In order to support the publication, member asked area businesses t purchase advertisements As an extra fund raise the Witness collaborate with the Pep Club to pro duce and sell a calendo featuring "The Men o '84," elected by the stu dent body.

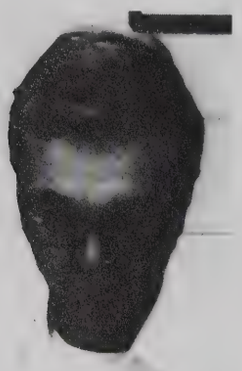
Let me in. Freshman Kevin Navin rushes to get to his IIP study hall on time. IIP teachers had periods allotted to help freshmen improve notetaking and study skills.



Breaking away. Guidance Counselor, Mr. Richard Cecil gives ninth-graders a break by calling them from their study halls to discuss scheduling for the upcoming year.

Get the message. While jotting down notes, Mr. Thomas Stavredes organizes his plans for the IIP students and teachers. Mr. Stavredes supervised this program.

Habit forming

Performing an informal skit for the Freshman Class, seven teachers involved with the Individual Instruction Program began the year by encouraging good study habits and reading skills. The cast included Mrs. Deborah Clarke, Rms. Mary Fehl, Mrs. Judy Harrell, Ms. Peg Langdon, Mr. Phil Malakoff, Mr. N. G. Stauss and Ms. Vivian Vance. These teachers portrayed typical students in hopes of stressing the importance of good study habits.

The IIP group, supervised by Principal Mr. Tom Stavredes and headed by Ms. Langdon, began its first year as an organization to guide students in developing attitudes, getting organized and sharpening reading skills. Packets distributed to the IIP teachers contained check lists and ideas for improving the students' performance.

The IIP instructors directed their efforts towards the entire Freshman Class however, in order to offer individual attention, each instructor had a special study hall for two or three freshmen needing extra help. In these study halls, teachers once again encouraged reading and study skills, hoping to help those students involved in the program improve their grades.

Along with their efforts to emphasize the importance of good study skills, the IIP teachers produced a television program on Channel 23 entitled Study Skills for the College-Bound Student. During the program, which aired in the winter, they discussed and reviewed the same areas stressed at school.

Two peas in a pod. Freshmen Sara Penhallow and Shawn Bass devote time to intense study during their week in IIP.

Eye strain. Putting his improved study skills to use, Freshman David Levet finds it easier to use study aids such as dictionaries in completing his English assignments.

Out of orde

Normally hectic school days became more so during the opening weeks of school. Principals rearranged their duties due to the prolonged absence of Assistant Principal Mr. Lindy Hill. When back problems prevented Mr. Hill from working until early November, Assistant Principals Mr. Bill Caldwell and Mr. Bruce Dickens and Administrative Aides Mr. Jay Arena and Mr. Jerry Kanner divided his responsibilities.

Mr. Dickens worked with club leaders and sponsors of all organizations and teams. He stressed the importance of advanced planning of activities and budgeting of expenses. A reduction in the student body caused a decrease in club membership; however, with Mr. Dickens encouragement, clubs became more organized.

As the number of students decreased, the variety of course offerings increased to allow a greater choice of classes. Principal Mr. Tom Stavredes commented, "We're offering more subjects today than five years ago when the school w much larger."

Fewer students did not result i lessening of office work as secreta Mrs. Joann Hockman, Mrs. M Menefee and Mrs. Mary Hayes fou themselves faced with a stea workload. Aside from their daily j of typing and answering phon they also dealt with students, pare and teachers. Finding answers to contant stream of questions mained one of their most impor duties.

Coming to the aid of an injured student, Mrs. Jan Ragland plans to patch up the wound. In addition to taking care of minor cuts and bruises, she helped students who felt a little under the weather.

Preparing for the busy lunch period, Mrs. Queen Bush slices ham and cheese. The cafeteria staff reported to work early each morning to make sandwiches and other entrees from the a la carte menu.

Finishing touches. Transforming senior Diane Eades into an old lady, Mrs. Debbie Owens assists the participants in the Variety Show with their make-up. Aside from her regular duties with campus security, Mrs. Owens worked behind the scenes with stage productions.

Keep off the grass training his eyes to see through the cloud of gnats and loose ades of grass, head custodian Earl mons plunged ahead to finish cut- g the plot of grass near Building o. The constant purr of the lawn ower's motor found its way into e classroom, and the aroma of shly cut grass crept by the noses of zing students as they longed to cape to the warm outdoors.

Cutting the grass occupied one sition on the list of the custodians' bs coordinated by Mr. Salmons and sistant Principal Mr. Lindy Hill. Fixing ulty plumbing and broken win- ws, general campus maintenance, d fulfilling teachers' work orders cupied the remaining hours.

While the custodial staff walked e campus making repairs, Mrs. bbie Owens roamed the school forcing rules and regulations. Her b involved searching for skippers in ddition to patrolling the parking lot d checking cars for parking viola- ns and proper registration. Mrs. wens' job not only involved gular school hours but also time er 3:30 p.m. She attended dances d games to enforce rules and par- ipated on the costume committees r school plays.

Also providing a service for the student body, Mrs. Nancy Shoemaker planned lunch menus to give students the opportunity to eat nutritious yet varied meals. Through bookkeeping and inventory records, Mrs. Shoemaker calculated the daily output of the cafeterias. The administration limited club meetings to the last 15 minutes of the lunch period, allowing enough time to buy food and also attend meetings. The change improved the economic situation of the cafeteria.

A change that occurred in the clinic involved the replacement of Mrs. Virginia Gandle with Mrs. Jan Ragland as school nurse. Mrs. Ragland aided sick or injured students whose needs ranged from band-aids to ice packs to crutches. "Working here means I have the same hours as the students. This helps because I have four children and like to spend time with them," she admitted.

Involved in the day to day problems of the students, Mrs. Peg Langdon supervised the In-School Suspension program. Students causing continual discipline problems, such as skipping found themselves in In-School Suspension. The administration hoped that the punishment would stimulate acceptable behavior. Mrs. Langdon supervised the completion of assignments while helping students obtain better habits and attitudes. In order to do this, Mrs. Langdon led group discussions after students completed portions of their work. "After three days in In-School Suspension most promised not to commit the same offense again," she explained.

Relieving Mrs. Langdon of her duty during seventh period, Mr. Tommy Carter supervised the classes. In addition, he worked part time in the attendance office helping Mrs. Sylvia Spooner compile students' records and call parents about absences.

Group therapy. Mrs. Peg Langdon, head of In-School-Suspension, keeps an eye on the students as they complete their assignments. Each day she conducted discussions with those assigned to ISS to assist them with their problems.

Construction and maintenance representative Mr. Bobby Briggs discusses a work order with Mr. Lindy Hill. For major repairs, such as cementing, the county sent personnel to complete the job.

Booktalk

Containing over 24,000 books, the library required the services of three faculty members: Ms. Sue Stocks, Ms. Rachel Rowland, and Ms. Jackie Bowes. However, as Ms. Stocks stated, "The library would be paralyzed without the help of the library aides." Ti-Li, the library aides' club, put in a total of over 1500 hours during the year, serving almost 46,000 library entrants.

Sixth period aide Julie Holt considered operating the stamp machine easy, but the worst job lay in shelving books, and getting them in order. However, the parties for Christmas and the end of the year became the best part of the year for library aides.

The Guidance Department took on more responsibility in school affairs. In addition to providing college transcripts and opportunities for the future, the department published honor roll lists, and helped underclassmen to determine long-term scheduling. The abundance jobs created by these new respo sibilities caused more work for M Bobby Jones, the guidan secretary. Fortunately, guidan aides volunteered during their stu halls to assist her.

In retrospect, Mrs. Jones declare "The department could not ha functioned without them." Th responsibilities included using microfiche to find students, collect reports, and running various errand

Book Check. A P.T.A. member and head librarian Ms. Sue Stocks check returned books into the librarian. Keeping careful records helped the librarians and their aides to determine who owed the library money and books.

Reading day. Mrs. Jackie Bowes skims through a new book before putting it on display for students. Librarians checked new arrivals to make certain the books met their standards.

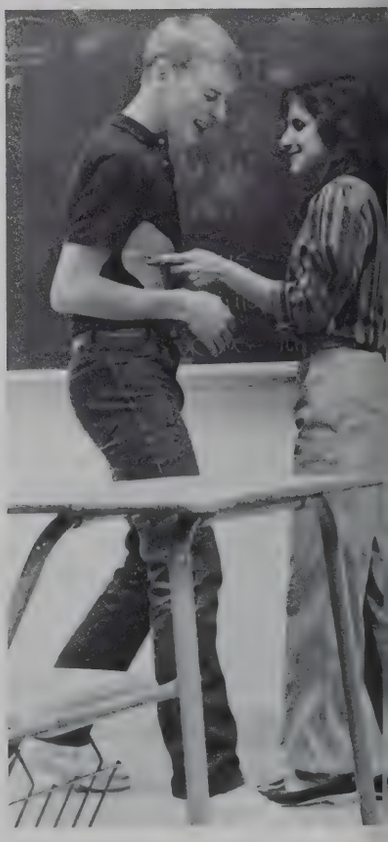
Thumbing through. Sophomore Jill Gravatt enjoys a magazine during a study hall. Open in the morning, during lunch and during study halls, the library provided opportunities for students to work during their free time.

Memory bank. A guidance aide learns from secretary Mrs. Bobbie Jones how to read the microfiche. The machine provided easier access to all information regarding students.

File it. Senior Michelle Horsely helps the guidance secretary by sending students notices of appointments with their counselors. The guidance department provided opportunities for students to work during study halls.

Friends, Romans, Countrymen. As classmates lend sophomore Richie Sharff their ear, he recites Mark Antony's famous speech from Shakespeare's Julius Caesar. The English curriculum required that all students make at least one oral presentation during the year.

Heave Ho. Members of Mr. Jeff Saunder's seventh period drama class haul sets to the auditorium in preparation for the spring musical, Barnum. These students gave up their time during class and after school to complete these sets.



Brain Drain. After three hours of taking the practice advanced placement English exam, English students felt mentally exhausted because of the pressure to do well. For the first time eleventh and twelfth grade honors English students had the opportunity to take the practice test, helping them feel more prepared for the actual examination.

Betrayal. Portraying Julius Caesar and Brutus, sophomores Keith Seiler and Betty Moudilos act out the stabbing. All tenth grade English classes read the play and memorized Mark Antony's speech.

The carpenters

With hammers and saws in hand, drama students quickly arned that show business was not glamour and stardom. Instead, it ok effort, ingenuity, and in some ses their weekends. In addition to orking during seventh period, these hateur carpenters gave up time er school to complete the sets for e fall and spring plays, Mousetrap d Barnum. To speed up produc-n, members of the English depart-ent also got in on the act. Mrs. Judy rrell supervised the designing of e sets and Mrs. Betty Cary con-buted by writing the program for e musical. Other teachers bstituted for director Mr. Jeff unders' classes during rehearsals.

Due to a small enrollment, Stagecraft, Drama I and Drama II courses combined and met at the same time. The 14 students involved in this class felt that the lack of interest in the department hampered their opportunity for further education in the dramatic arts. In spite of this they believed they gained confidence by taking the class. Sophomore Kelly Kravitz stated, "Working on a school play is the most fun you will have in high school."

English and Drama teacher Mr. Saunders also believed drama developed confidence. He helped students with their stage presence and planned a field trip to the Virginia Center for Performing Arts. Mr. Saunders felt that, "The class helps students learn about themselves and their limitations." Along with the drama department, English students worked to overcome their shyness as they presented oral reports and recited passages from Romeo and Juliet, Julius Caesar or other famous literary works.

Two members of the English Department showed their talents to colleagues at the Management Development Center. During the two-day workshop department head Mrs. Vicki Ford and Mr. Saunders reviewed writing techniques and explained Project DEEP, respectively. English teachers from around the county learned methods of instructing the correct procedure in answering discussion questions and writing themes.

Clowning around. Led on stage by cast members, Mrs. Judy Harrell makes her debut during dress rehearsal. Characters dressed as clowns and mingled among the audience performing tricks and selling popcorn and peanuts.

Time machine

Stepping back into time, Spanish students wandered among stone sculptures of serpents and indian gods and displays of ancient jewelry and sacrificial heart boxes. Spanish III, IV and V classes saw first-hand evidence of what they had studied in literature by travelling to Washington, D.C. to visit the Aztec exhibit at the National Gallery of Art.

Later in the year advanced French and German students made the same trip, visiting the more well-known classics in the permanent section of the gallery. French IV students prepared for the trip by researching different artists and making a presentation to their classmates.

Changing from the daily routine in the classroom these same Spanish and French students listened to a speech by Colonel Stuff from the Army. He discussed the benefits of foreign languages with respect to the military and other career options.

Language students participated in the International Dinner, where they brought and sampled foods from around the world. They also worked together on Curriculum Day, answering scheduling questions and encouraging enrollment.

Curriculum Day provided an o portunity for the Business Departme to show a video tape with scen from each type of course offere Responding to the recent dema the Computer Applications class e tended from one to two semeste teaching the practical uses of co puters in the business world. Gaini additional useful skills, Distributi Education students learned throu projects and hands-on experime such as role playing and designing business logo.

Typos. Beginning Typewriting students work to complete an agenda, their latest assignment. After mastering the keyboard, they learned to type business and personal letters, memos and term papers.

Whiz kid. As she inputs her program, Julie Tyrolf watches the results on the monitor. In the Computer Concepts class, students discovered some of the uses of the microcomputer in a business environment.

Over the table. Caroline Padgett and Beth Edwards work together to complete their final Spanish V project. With only three people in the class, they met at the same time as Spanish IV and worked independently.

Triple dip. Learning about French cuisine, Ms. Ruby Neagle's French I students prepare a cheese fondue. As a culmination of the food unit they also tasted quiche and crepes.

Recital. Sophomore Mike Fincham uses words from the latest vocabulary lesson to make a presentation to his classmates. Spanish II students in Mrs. Carlton Laskauskas' classes completed an oral assignment each Friday.

Letting her fingers do the walking. Mrs. Ward's sociology class gathers in a circle to discuss social issues while she leafs through the phone book to find possible guest speakers. Visitors came to talk about juvenile gangs, child abuse and other issues.

Or Else! Ruling over their prisoners, the guards order them to follow commands or to play the price and receive punishment. Coach Bryant's psychology classes performed this and other experiments demonstrating how stress and other psychological problems affect the body physically.

Parade rest. Ready to present the colors, the Virginia Air National Guard color guard awaits the command to move to the center of the gym. This presentation began the Veteran's Day assembly organized by History Department Chairman Mr. Steve Galyen.

Take five. Junior Paul Rutherford takes a break from his U.S. History notes. Often, history teachers taught by lectures only, showing students the importance of taking good notes on their own.

Foot the bill

Pushing their bills through committee, debating the pros and cons of the issues with their classmates and following parliamentary procedure gave seniors a glimpse of the work involved in the legislative branch of government. During May, Mr. Jay Arena and Mrs. Bea Dalton's government classes participated in Mock Congress where they discussed and voted on subjects such as nuclear energy, abortion, ERA, lengthening the presidental term and gun control.

April all government classes observed Government Day Act in which the Henrico County Voter Registrar registered all elegible seniors to vote.

Early in the year, sociology students prepared a self-analysis in which they examined their own feelings. Mrs. Ida Ward discussed the subject of socialization which helped the students to understand themselves, their values and their relationship with their parents and friends. The class also prepared presentations on social concerns such as child abuse, juvenile gangs, old age, and euthanasia. To obtain the knowledge for the projects, students interviewed specialists in the fields and researched their topics. Guest speakers talked about various situations, their causes, and how to approach the problem to find answers. During a study of the judicial system and its effects on society, the class visited courts and prisons.

Psychology classes also emphasized the importance of research. Coach Buddy Bryant challenged his students to conduct their own experiments in order to study any quality of human behavior they chose. This required students to consider research ethics and proper techniques. As another project, the class took psychological tests to determine their career interests. Then each student interviewed a professional in the area of their choice and presented the information to the class. Psychology class also studied different aspects of human behavior. To involve his students in their education, Coach Bryant conducted experiments with the class. Junior Sherry Edwards remarked, "He tried to make the class interesting because I think he really wanted us to learn. I appreciated the fact that he applied the information to practical, real-life situations."

Let me see. First-hand knowledge makes the lesson come alive for World History and Geography I students as they examine materials and photographs from the Vietnam War.

Out of the ordinary. A bicycle wheel aids a ninth-grade science class in completing a movement lab. Often, ordinary equipment such as the wheel helped students to visualize physical science theories they learned in class.

All work and no play. Jumping rope in science class demonstrates the principle of physics to Mrs. Fran Purdum's physical science classes. Taking part in experiments proved a relief from the monotony of the classroom.

Blinded by the light. Junior Tyler Shelton uses a handmade gadget to find the height of the school flagpole. This activity proved a practical application of mathematical concepts learned in Mrs. Evelyn Rubin's geometry classes.

High tech

A computer craze attacked the science department proving elpful to teachers in recording rades and making up tests. The ewly acquired computer also ex- ted as a teaching tool by working vertime with students. Another hange in the science department in- luded a luncheon held in May in Ms. ane Selden's classroom. The room rovided a place for invited students nd science teachers to get ac- uainted. During the get together utstanding students received wards of scholarship. The depart- nent started this event to honor udents that did not receive recogni- on during the choolwide assembly. Ms. Selden commented, "Since this vas such a big success, other depart- nent will probably copy our idea."

Mrs. Fran Purdum's science classes ravelled to the Medical College of Virginia to take a closer look at body parts kept in storage for research. Completing the list of field trips, Ms. Selden's honors biology class went on the annual canoe trip.

Back on campus, the newly-expanded computer lab in the math department allowed those students interested in computer occupations to expand their knowledge. The lab, which included two computers last year but increased to eleven, moved to Building Ten for improved climate control and security. The P.T.A. and the county paid for six of the computers, and the computer class raised enough for three more.

In addition, Mrs. Evelyn Rubin, Ramin Alimard, Angela DeVaun, Sherry Edwards, Robyn Shahda and Rhonda Smith took part in an all-day program held at the Math and Science Center. It presented information about techniques in computers, electronics and graphing.

Mad Scientists. Junior Paige Randolph carefully drains a solution into a breaker as senior Mundy Viar observes a color change. Using the buret Mr. Jim Hammack's chemistry classes completed the acid-base titration.

Cut it out. Onlooker Larry Soble assists Becky Gross in dissecting a cat in Third Semester Biology. While some students preferred not getting involved, others brave enough to try completed their assignment.

Color by number. Completing his mural in Building Ten, sophomore David Turner displays his artistic abilities in a prominent location. Art 4 students also helped decorate Building Ten during the last six weeks.

Classroom band. Preschoolers express themselves musically during creative play time. Home Economics students Becky Powers and Linda Giles helped the 3 and 4 year olds with the activities planned for Play School.

One Man Show. Sophomore Chris Phelps and science teacher Greg Metcalf admire the paintings by David Turner displayed in the art gallery. David hoped to sell some of his works during his exhibition held in May.

Good eggs

Adorning their baby eggs with pink and blue decorations, amily Living students gave human haracteristics to the otherwise inimate objects. These students cared hardboiled eggs for a week in e spring to learn about parental ponsibilities. The new parents found necessary to provide security and ppy homes for their children while cating a babysitter if they wanted leave their eggs for an evening on e town.

The curriculum for all Home onomics classes focused on the eme Decisions, Decisions. This topic ealt with learning about different reers and job options for each stuent. In addition to learning about reers the classes concentrated on ily decisions that one might face.

One decision that Family Living udents would encounter, marriage, ave the class the opportunity to rganize a mock wedding. This imitaon aided students in becoming miliar with making arrangements r a formal wedding ceremony. rawing names from a hat, pupils hose the bride and groom, Laura ummings and Luke Reid, who, in rn, selected their attendants.

Those who decided to remain achelors found that the Single Living asses offered solutions to problems hat might be encountered while ngle. Students learned skills like how purchase an automobile and how to keep an apartment clean. Single Living classes also participated in a cooking unit by competing in the annual bake-off with Douglas Freeman High School. Members of the classees submitted snacks and favorite dishes for judging.

Studying the difference between home-made food from a restaurant's, the Homemaking I and II classes took field trips to Casa Gallardo and the Magic Wok. At these locations they observed the preparation of larger meals. In addition, both Homemaking classes made candles and cross stitch ornaments. These ornaments served as decorations for the office Christmas tree.

Just as each Home Economics class concentrated on different materials, each art class focused on forms of art. The Art Department offered different levels, beginning with Art I and going through Directed Independent Study. Those who took Art I experimented with basic techniques and materials. Art II gave an introduction into the world in which individualism played an important role. Art III students explored aspects of commercial art and advertising. Anatomical structures, sculptural paintings and jewelry making composed the Art IV curriculum. Mrs. Joan Dodd assisted the Directed Independent Study class, designed for students intending to incorporate their artistic abilities into careers.

Students from each class submitted works of art to the Festival of Arts and Technology held at Hermitage High School in May. For those taking more advanced classes this type of display of work proved routine. The art gallery located in room 15 served as an area to show off finished products to the rest of the school.

In order for those taking art to view more professional work, guest speakers from Virginia Commonwealth University and the Design Schools of Pennsylvania visited classes. "The portfolio of work brought by the guest speaker Mary Jacoby stimulated a greater interest in those students who are planning to pursue an art career," explained Mrs. Dodd. Ms. Jacoby, from the Design Schools, brought examples of work including two-dimensionals consisting of pen and ink, prisma colors, water colors and tempras.

Top Chef. On the morning of the Freeman-Tucker Bake-Off, Sophomore Lisa Turner prepares her entry for judging. The panel of judges awarded Lisa top prize of the day for her tea ring.

Best in show

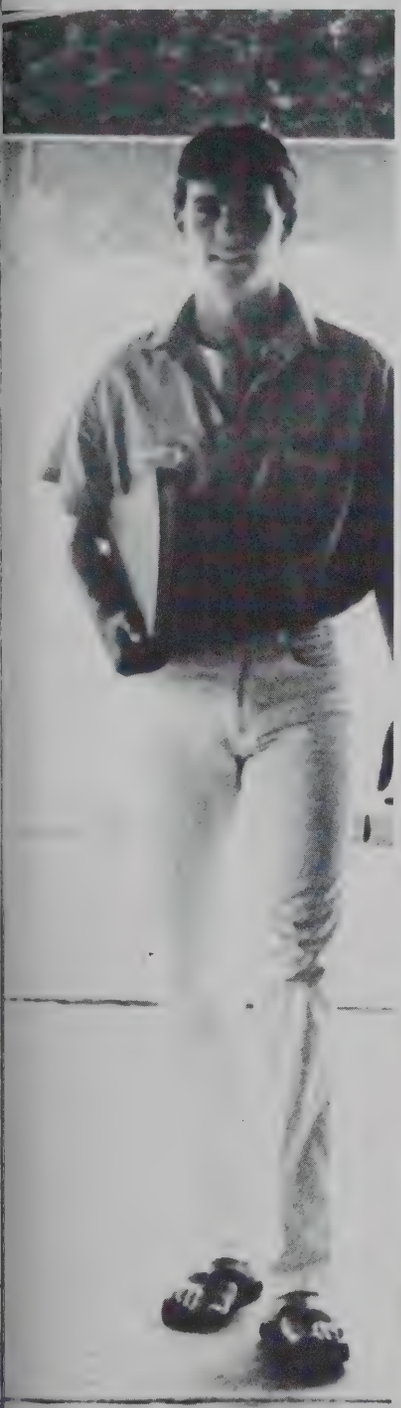
A little to the left. To show off the department's awards and certificates, Ted Perkinson and Dung Nguyen set up the Industrial Arts display for curriculum Day.

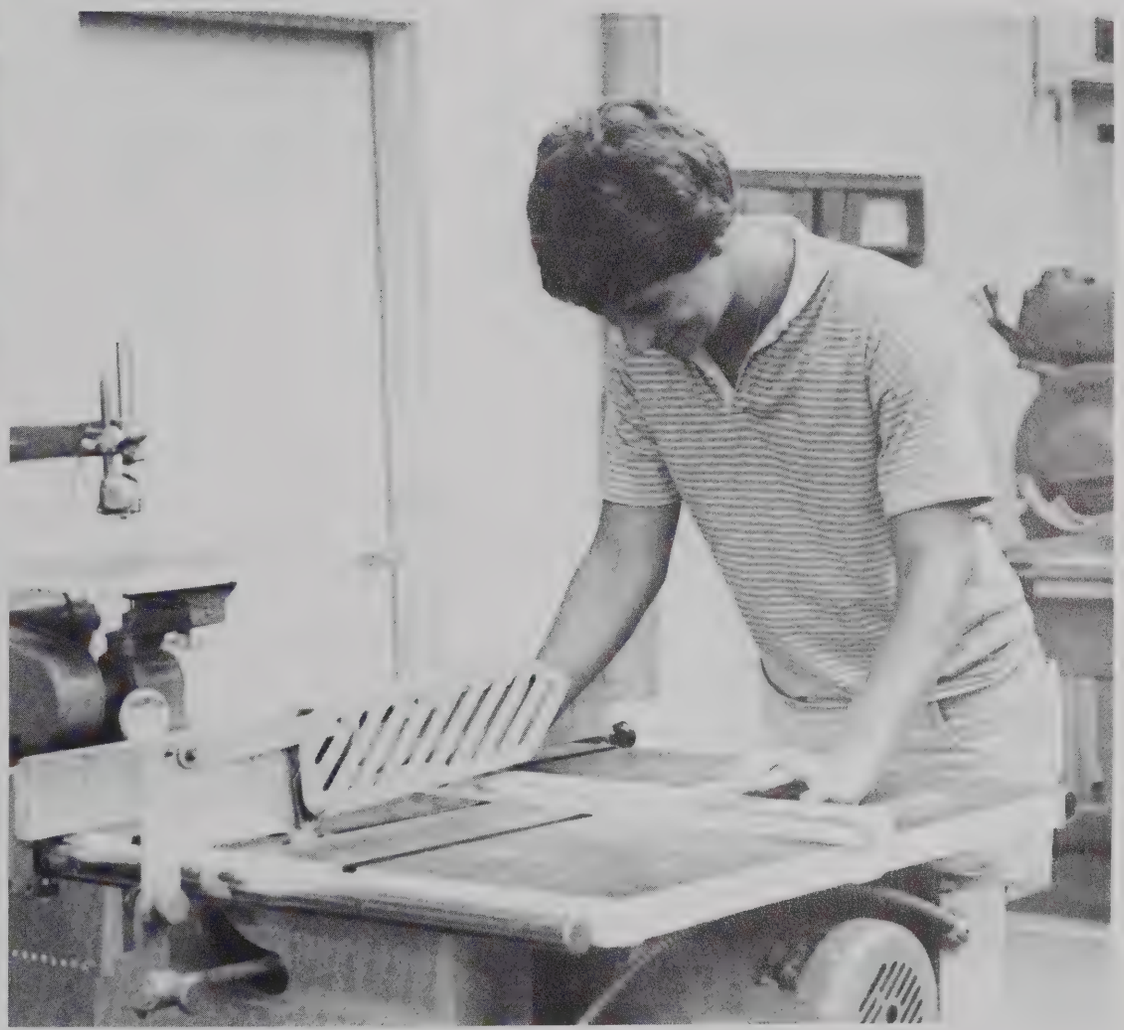
Competing in the State Industrial Arts Festival at Virginia Commonwealth University, the Industrial Arts Department won the category of Best Industrial Arts Projects and Programs in the entire state. In individual competitions, the school ranked second.

Working all year long on their main projects, senior Curt Clingenpeel and junior Alan Farren brought home their own ribbons. Curt designed, created plans and built a china cabinet for which he won Runner Up for Best Craftsmanship. Alan's work on a roll-top desk won First Place, Highest Technology on an Industrial Arts Project.

Other students interested in learning vocational skills went to the Vocational Technical Center located at Hermitage High School. They gained experience in a trade, spending a half of the school day studying area of their choice. The center fered training in 13 different fie Senior Nam Nguyen participated the drafting program and receiv recognition for perfect attenda for the year. He was also nam Outstanding Male Student a Outstanding Drafting Student.

ack to school. After spending the afternoon at e Vocational Technical Center at Hermitage gh School, junior Scott Young returns to icker just before the final bell rings.





Cutting up. Freshman Robbie Ettinger uses a table saw to finish his project in Woodworking I.

Reckless

Screech!!! Backing up in a Driver's Education vehicle proved hazardous for sophomore Lisa Disse as she plowed into the door of the tower during her first day on the range. Prior to the range, bookwork and practice on the simulators helped incidents like this to stay at a minimum. Up-to-date texts allowed the students to became acquainted with new driving laws and regulations. The Driver's Education course included 66 hours in the classroom, 12 hours of simulation, 12 hours on the range and eight hours of on-the-road training. After successful completion of these steps of the program students became eligible to obtain their licenses.

Also in preparation for potential experiences, ninth and tenth graders studied health as part of their physical education curriculum. During the winter months, classes alternated weekly between physical activities and health. Freshmen learned basic first aid skills and Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation while the sophomores focused on mental health disorders.

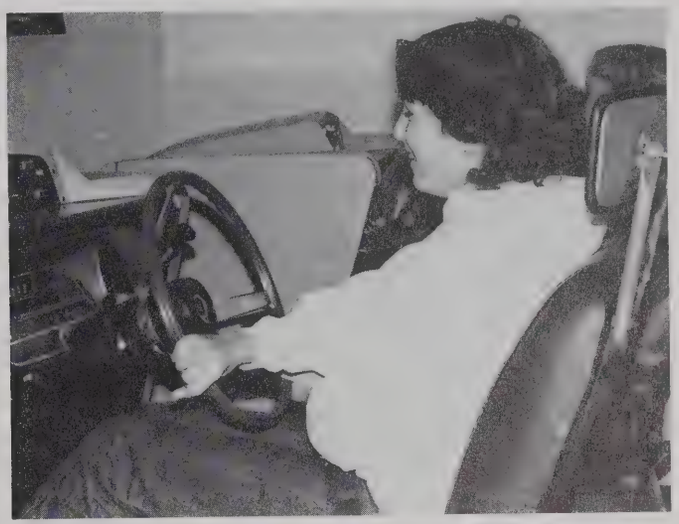
Just as the health classes helped students to learn more about their bodies, the coaches emphasized improving physical fitness. To measure students' progress, gym teachers administered a national physical fitness tests in the fall and the spring. By comparing the results, they determined areas of strengths and weaknesses.

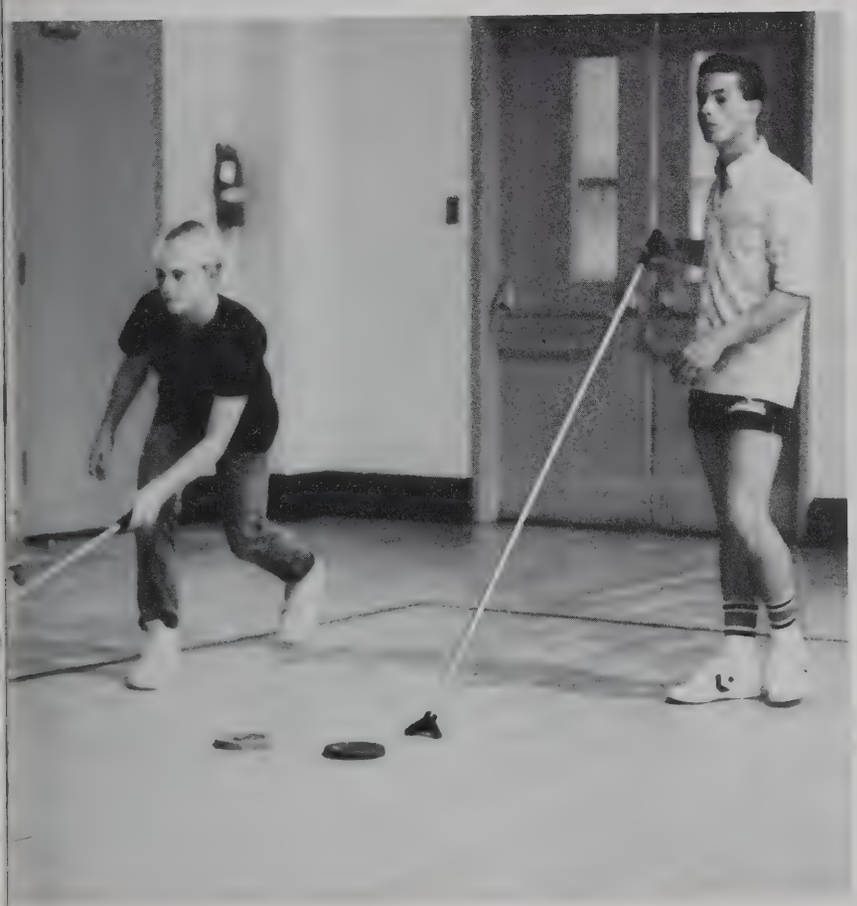
During the rest of the yea physical education classes pa ticipated in different types of a tivities. Sports such as tennis and gym nastics emphasized individual sk while softball, soccer and volleyb depended on team effort. This vari ty of athletic competition gav freshmen and sophomores the o portunity to improve their coordin tion and also prevented them fro getting tired of a particular spo Energetic involvement in activiti allowed students to let off steam bu up during the day. Those who felt th need for added excitement cou always initiate a powder battle hide classmates' clothes and shoes.

Next. Physical education instructor Miss Edie Ellis distributes bowling score cards to freshmen. Students set up bowling lanes in the gym using lightweight plastic balls and pins.

Watch the birdie. As teammate Teresa Brownie looks on, Michelle Doggett attempts to serve the birdie. During the winter months physical education classes alternated one week in the gym and one week in the health classroom.

Hand over hand. Making sure not to turn the steering wheel too far, sophomore Robyn Shahda follows the instructor's directions in the simulation movie.





Heads up. Ninth graders learn about competition and team effort by playing basketball. Coed physical education classes usually split into separate groups for such sports as soccer, gymnastics, wrestling and basketball.

Ready for retirement. Perfecting his shuffleboard technique, freshman Trey Clay takes his turn while classmate Scott Parsons awaits on deck. Miss Ellis' classes divided into small groups for badminton, bowling, volleyball and shuffleboard.

As the new teacher entered the room she studied the diverse personalities of the members of the class. She observed an energetic freshman trying to prevent a junior from cramming for a test and a sophomore gir daydreaming about the senior guy asleep in the corner of the room. She also noticed as many differen nationalities as clothing and hair styles. At that moment the teacher stopped looking at the class as one unit and began thinking of the Individuals

Tigers proved that bigger did not necessarily mean better a they continued to earn commendation for their achievements Despite a decreased enrollment of 1329 students, there was no lack of recognition for their individual accomplishments Whether concentrating on academic pursuits, athletic endeavors, job responsibilities or personal hobbies, individual found a means of bringing out their best.

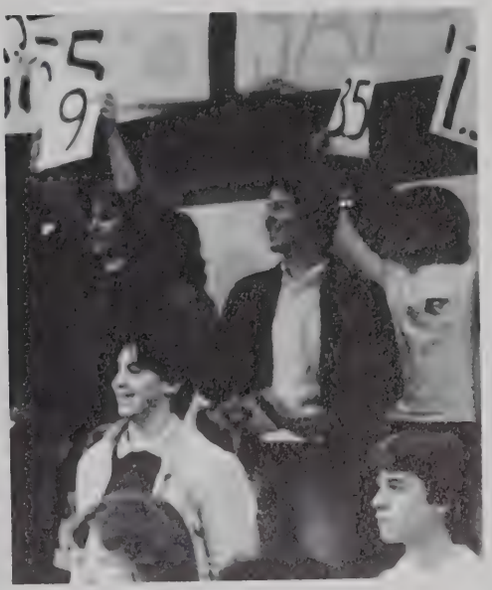
Balancing obligations at school with their more physical interests, senior Tracy Fearnow and freshman Jenny Bragg demonstrated the ability to excel. Tracy, a synchronized swimmer, transferred to Tucker to be with her coach, who lived in the district. She followed a strict schedule, practicing each afternoon at her coach's pool and traveling to Briarwood Club for night practices. Jenny competed on the swim team at Briarwood, working out at least once every day except Sunday.

A keen sense of competition also paid off for senior Norma Miller. Carrying multiple paper routes since 1975, Norma won trips within the United States and abroad. Her efforts earned her scholarships from the Richmond Newspapers, Inc. which they awarded during the Awards Assembly in the spring.

Encouraging all students to work to their full potential, the Awards Assembly named recipients of departmental awards and senior honors and scholarships. Watching as the seniors filed into the gym dressed in caps and gowns underclassmen realized the importance of persevering to attain their individual goals. Although the graduating class consisted of only 265 members, a strong sense of accomplishment and expectation prevailed. Thinking big helped not only the seniors but all classes overcome any difficulties created by reduced enrollment.

Hanging around. Propped on the wall in front of building one, senior Tracy Fearnow utilizes spare moments during 7th period to study. Due to a rigorous practice schedule, she had a limited amount of time for homework.

Chit chat. Lining the fence during a home football game, students use the time to socialize instead of watching the action on the field. A smaller student body resulted in smaller turnouts at football games.



Viewpoint. During the introduction of the Varsity Basketball team, senior guys rate each player on a scale from 1-20. Pep rallies encouraged class participation and competition, allowing individuals to express their enthusiasm toward the athletes.

The long and short of it. Senior Joey Warren towers over freshman Thuy Nguyen. The two illustrated one contrast among the wide range of physical characteristics as well as cultural backgrounds.

Life's a beach

Overcast skies and low temperatures did not prevent seniors from sunbathing on the sidewalks in front of Building 10 on May 18. Normal lunchtime activities ceased as students pulled out their radios, beach equipment and surfboards. Beach day brought a fitting close to Senior Week during which each day had a different theme. On Tuesday seniors wore shirts from the college they planned to attend, and on Wednesday they dressed as their favorite teachers.

The class also showed spirit at pep rallies as they finally won a spirit football. Lining the gym floor, a group of students performed their own version of the guillotine using kazoos. This skit encouraged seniors to demonstrate more class spirit than usual, earning them the spirit football for the first time in four years.

In addition to organizing skits for pep rallies, seniors collaborated to produce a script for the Variety Show. The acts centered around th theme Not Necessarily the News, as ten writer combined their ideas to create a show with cor inuity and crowd appeal. The cast practiced dail for three weeks under the leadership of Studer Directors Michelle Akers, Mary Beth Lynch an Leslie Tate. Although not a sponsor of the clas Mr. Steve Whitten devoted his evenings to hel the Senior Class put on the show. Due to a ban trip, the class moved the dates to Thursday an Friday nights so band members could still pa ticipate. Despite the switch in days, the Senio Class collected over $1500.

Utilizing money from the treasury, the cla sponsored a sub party after first semester exam Seniors celebrated the last time for taking exam in all classes with sandwiches from Bernie's Su Shop. At the end of the year following gradu tion rehearsal, seniors gathered at Three Cho pool for a picnic and pool party.

Roll call

As midnight rolled around, a group of seniors drove to a nearby all night grocery store to purchase 12 packs of toilet tissue and three cans of generic shaving cream. Seniors harassed friends who had birthdays on Friday or Saturday nights, and secretly wrapped their houses and cars in toilet paper while hoping that the victims would not find out about their devious actions. Students found a variety of ways to relax on their days off from the pressures of school. Senior Lee Rohn exclaimed, "I live for Friday nights! I normally go a party and sleep late the next day, and then I go to another party Saturday night!"

Jobs allowed students to earn money towards college tuitions or for spending on frivolous outings with friends. Moviegoers ventured to their favorite theaters and paid $4 to catch up on the recent films. Mr. Gatti's, McDonald's, and local hot spots attracted them to socialize, relax and eat.

More serious pursuits occupied weekends for band members, the forensics team and other school organizations. Active participants in all of these groups devoted themselves to hours of competitions, workshops, and practice sessions. The seniors involved hoped to win more awards than in previous years to make their final year memorable.

Other students had no desire to have anything to do with school in their free time. Lisa Ettinger stated, "There isn't enough time during the week to spend with my friends who attend different schools. I look forward to weekends to catch up on the latest gossip."

Seeking adventure Adele Nighman and Ellen Moy risked injury to life and limb while hiking the Appalachian Trail. They belonged to the High Adventure Explorers Post, enabling them to attempt such outings.

Living for the weekend and counting the days until graduation made the school week more tolerable. Whatever activity seniors chose to pursue they tended to try to bring relief and pleasure into their otherwise routine schedules. As Laurie Herron simply put it, "Thank God for my social life! I'd never live through my last year."

Let's roll! Burdened with packages of toilet paper senior Adele Nighman gathers all the necessities for a night of revenge. Friends often perpetrated good-natured pranks as rolling each other's homes to celebrate a birthday or another important occasion.

Comic relief

Practical jokes such as adjusting the air conditioner, disassembling beds, then laughing when people sat on them relieved the tension and pressure of Boys' State, a convention consisting of selected high school juniors from all over Virginia. The students represented a model state of Virginia by categorizing groups of students as the different cities of the state. Each city had responsibilities and duties to carry out just as the real city would. Sponsored by the American Legion, students learned about the governmental system of the state legislature.

Chosen by teachers and interviewed by the American Legion, Danny Brown and Tim Legler took part in Boys' State. For one week, they attended seminars, listened to lectures, formed their own governments, played sports and learned to cooperate with other people.

Located at Lynchburg College, the program enforced strict rules and regulations. These included room inspections, a curfew at 11:30 p.m., marching in designated groups and wearing uniforms. Clothing requirements meant sporting a Boys' State tee shirt, white shorts, tennis shoes white socks and a name tag.

Besides honoring male students of the class o '84, Girls' State also recognized outstandin females. The American Legion Auxiliary selecte Peggy Brown and Leslie Tate as representatives They followed similar rules and regulations a their male counterparts, but their program too place in Farmville, Virginia, at Longwood Co lege. The dress code required the girls to wea dresses or skirts at all times. Despite the dres code and the amount of work required, Danny Peggy, Tim and Leslie enjoyed the week spen learning the importance of cooperating and th necessity of discipline in the government.

Tedious work paid off and at the end of th week, Tim concluded, "Boys' State was an ex perience that I'll remember for a long time. I'm very glad that I was given the chance to mee talented people and learn about governmen and discipline."

Running on empty

Striking at any moment, senioritis afflicted unsuspecting students in every class, cafeteria and extracurricular activity. Even though senioritis commonly plagued seniors, contamination spread to underclass-men. Senioritis season peaked near the end of the school year leaving the student body apathetic. Guidance counselors and clinic attendants offered no cure but compiled a list of symptoms.

1. Does you weekend begin on Monday? You begin gathering information about week-end events on Monday and prepare party supplies on Tuesday, waiting for Friday night to arrive.
2. Do you believe in fairy tales? You seriously believe you will begin studying tomorrow.
3. Are you relapsing into puberty? Your voice changes into a whine every time teachers announce test dates.
4. Are your books in perfect condition? They show no sign of use, remaining on the sofa where you drop them after school.
5. Do you constantly nap? Due to circumstances beyond your control, a monotone voice forces you into overpowering drowsiness during government.
6. Do you have mathephobia? You are scared of things you don't understand and fear that the teacher will check homework.
7. Do you have tendencies toward mono-thinking? Your brain constantly chants the words beach, beach, beach.
8. Does cramming make you nauseated? Instead of studying, you skip school and take the make-up test a week later.
9. Are you a hypochondriac? You sincerely believe that senior slump is an incurable back disorder contracted from a chemistry stool.

Possessing one to three of these symptoms indicates that you are immune to senioritis. However, Short Pump doctors have proven that too much immunity increases the chance of mid-life crisis. Having four to six of these symptoms shows that you are susceptible to senioritis. Therefore, stay away from contaminated seniors and watch only shows on Public Broadcasting Television. Ha! Ha! Ha! No beach for you! If you have seven to ten of the symptoms you'll probably be in summer school. Get acquainted with failure since F is the only letter in the alphabet you will encounter.

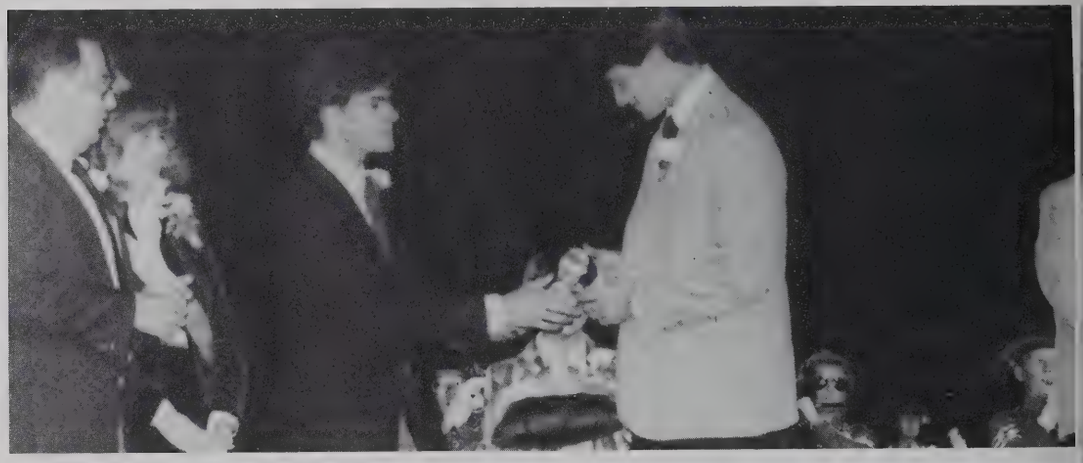
Cross country

Equipped with baseball bat and glove, Senior Tony Haney arrived at the National Sports Festival in Colorado Springs, Colorado ready to play. The National Sports Festival, which took place from June 18 to June 30, encompassed 33 sports. Each sport included four different teams, North, South, East and West.

Traveling to Hampton, Virginia for tryouts, Tony received the opportunity to try his skills in hitting, running and fielding before regional coaches and scouts. Tony noted, "I entered the tryouts not knowing whether I would reach the National Sports Festival, the Olympics or the Pan Am Games team. These tryouts did not insure a position on any of the teams." A favorable showing enabled Tony to capture a position on the East team.

Once they arrived in Colorado, the players on the East team practiced and acquired their positions. Tony changed from second base to batting in the designated hitter spot because of his batting average of .347. Chosen as the underdogs, his team went on to achieve a 4-1 record an capture the gold medal by upsetting the West i the championship.

Tony's performance as the youngest membe of the team earned him a spot on the Worl Friendship Series team. He traveled t Johnstown, Pennsylvania along with 16 othe players from throughout America. The America team competed against seven other countries. three-way tie emerged between the Unite States, Taiwan and Canada causing a roun robin tournament. Since the U.S.A. and Taiwc defeated Canada, these two teams played the championship game. The U.S.A. fell shor however, as Taiwan outscored them 5-4. Whi participating in both the National Sports Festiv and the World Friendship Series, Tony came contact with players who had interests ar abilities similar to his own. He also encountere coaches who assisted him with his baseball skil bringing him closer to his goal of becoming professional baseball player.



King of the hill. Senior Tony Haney accepts the title of Homecoming King from 1983 graduate George Thomas. Tony's participation in both athletic and scholastic activities helped him to receive the crown.

What's on your mind?

The red lights on the top of the television cameras flashed, the final jolts of adrenalin kicked in, and emcee Mr. Frank Soden exclaimed, "Welcome to this week's edition of Battle of the Brains!" Each Thursday night high school teams competed live on Channel 23, but on October 20 the event took on significance for five Tigers. Seniors Fred Banks and Phil Hinkley and juniors Leila Cottingham, Jeremy Blank and Trevor Burroughs listened closely as Mr. Soden posed the questions during the contest against Patrick Henry High School.

The Battle of the Brains team, sponsored by the NHS and Sponsor Mrs. Bea Dalton, trained for the competition during lunche ;. The teammates asked each other sample questions taken fr books of trivia questions. "Even without the vantages some other schools have, such as e tric buzzers and inter-school scrimmages, I felt were adequately prepared," Captain Jere Blank concluded.

Early in the competition, Tucker kept p with the Patriots, falling only 15 points behin the half. In the second half, however, they trouble keeping up with the opposing tea captain, Miles Gibson, losing the match by c 150 points. "He was unbelievable! He answe lots of questions before Mr. Soden finished as them," Leila Cottingham recalled.

Cavemen

For most, plunging into a deep, dark hole would result in a frightening experience. However, seniors Doug Baber and Jamie Faison discovered that caves offered a challenge surpassed by few other pastimes. Jaimie and Doug pursued a sport called spelunking. Spelunking, the recreation of exploring caves, presented these two with unlimited adventures.

A mutual friend at the University of Virginia introduced them to spelunking one-and-a-half years ago, and since, the two actively pursued the sport. About once every two months since entering the explorer's world, Doug and Jamie headed for caves, usually in the vicinity of Charlottesville. According to them, George Washington National Park presented numerous opportunities, due to the number of caves available for explorations. In fact, they crawled 500 yards into one cave, the farthest they ever descended.

This activity required plenty of time, preparation and equipment. Jamie explained, "To go spelunking, you need a carbide or electric lamp, coveralls, a short rope, a knapsack, knee and elbow pads, and a hardhat." Doug added, "We're usually able to rent or borrow them from the Richmond Area Speleological Society, even though neither of us has a membership." RASS, an organization dedicated to the furthering of caving pursuits, helped beginning explorers.

When thinking of caves, bats usually came to mind. The boys insisted, though, that they presented no major problems. The bat's high-pitched signals acted as a radar to keep the furry little pests out of humans' way. Aside from mere surprises, bats never harmed the boys.

Inner sanctum. Seniors Doug Baber and Jamie Faison rest for a few minutes before continuing their expedition through the cave. They spent weekends investigating the interiors of these natural phenomena.

Down and dirty. Exercising his speleological talents, senior Jamie Faison exits a cave after a thorough search. Jamie and Doug frequently visited George Washington National Park.

Three-year plan

Work, work and more work: some seniors felt they would never graduate with the work they had to do. However, four students, David Bean, Kelly Bruner, Phil Hinkley, and Hue Anh Nguyen, decided to increase their workload so that they could graduate a year earlier than scheduled. This required doubling up on certain classes, usually English and history, or taking these courses in summer school. Although they felt pressured by the extra studying, they persevered to complete their high school education in three years.

Specific reasons for their decisions differed. However, they all revolved around a desire to leave high school and start a new aspect of life, including college, work, or the military services. Senior Hue Anh Nguyen felt that by graduating early she would have an extra year to devote to her college studying. Therefore she would not feel pressured to complete her education in four years. Phil Hinkley wanted to earn money so he could eventually live in England and attend a small specialized art college.

Whatever the motive, the students believed that they had made the correct decision. Nonetheless, they saw a drawback in leaving their friends and classmates behind after graduation. David Bean remarked, "I don't feel like a senior because no one recognizes me as one. By graduating early you don't get the respect that a normal senior would." Phil Hinkley commented, "I've been transferred to a senior homeroom, and I have senior priviledges, but my heart is still with the Junior Class."

After choosing to graduate early, the students discovered that the faculty aided them in completing their school year. Kelly Bruner added, "The faculty and administration cooperated willingly with my decision." However, the seniors noted that teachers generally treated them as they would other students, giving them equal amounts of work. By giving them guidance without special treatment the faculty helped the early graduates view their goal realistically.

Doctor, lawyer, beggerman, thief? Thumbing through an Occupational Outlook Handbook in the Guidance Department, senior Hue Anh Nguyen investigates possible careers. After graduation, Hue Anh planned to continue her education at Virginia Commonwealth University.

An early start. Guidance counselor Mrs. Jo Mayfield advises senior Phil Hinkley about the best time to take SAT's. Because he decided to graduate after just three years of high school, he, along with other early graduates, faced taking college board examinations and applying for admission to college earlier than most students.

Southern comfort

"How about something like New York City?" asked one sophisticated teenager. "No, I want palm trees and a deserted island, like paradise," whined a starry-eyed girl. "Wouldn't it be cool if we dressed in ducktails and top hats like Scarlet O'Hara and Rhett Butler in Gone With the Wind?" offered one nostalgia buff. "Personally, I just want some lunch," growled Rob Reid, president of the Junior Class. After much deliberation, the class voted on the romantic southern theme Gone With the Wind. Gaining approval from their sponsors Mrs. Deborah Clarke and Mrs. Mary Fehl, they began plans for the prom. In order to continue the year-old tradition of holding the dance off campus, they rented Belmont Park Recreation Center and hired the band Staircase for the May 12 event.

The Class of '85 also initiated their own tradition by employing a disc jockey for the Sadie Hawkin's dance. Hal Hathaway, from WKIE, provided a mix of music which pleased the crowd, and the juniors yielded a profit of $700. "This is a responsible class, and they've really done well watching the treasury," bragged Mrs. Clarke.

Other endeavors included a rendition of "Leave it to Beaver" in the Variety Show. Portraying the Cleaver Family, the cast members mocked the perfect family. Mrs. Cleaver (Jessie Whitten) flirted throughout the skit with Eddie Haskell (Anthony Falco), while Wally (Rob Reid) awed the neighborhood girls with his All-American boy appearance. Mark Jones depicted Beaver as the typical nerd. Dressed in high water pants and with masking tape on his glasses, he amused the audience by simply walking on the stage. His whining voice and refusal to meet girls made his role humorous and convincing.

Parking

Flaunting their status and newly-earned privilege, juniors enjoyed gloating about their ability to drive to school. Junior Missy Getsy exclaimed, "Man, I felt so above the lowerclassmen, I just wanted to stop in front of the bus stop and ask Hey, are y'all waiting for the bus? . . . Well, have fun!! I didn't have time though, because I was running late." Unfortunately, the excitement vanished as quickly as their $10 registration fee. In addition, the handy-dandy list of rules and regulations which accompanied each parking sticker shot down expectations of loitering in the car while listening to favorite songs or using the vehicles as extra lockers. The enumeration of restrictions prevented students from parking "other than between designated parking lines" or occupying visitors' spaces. Common sense and safety governed the making of these principles. Reinforcing the need for regulations, Mrs. Debbie Owens stated that students could not return to the lot during school because of possible problems with drinking and drug abuse.

In spite of the limitations, the novelty of driving motivated students to come to school in automobiles of all shapes and sizes, ranging from a hunk of junk to a 1984 Trans Am. The students with a choice drove cars that reflected their personalities. License plates such as "IMA PYT" or "Chubie" also gave a personalized effect to the otherwise ordinary vehicle.

Although some put much time and effort to add a touch of class to their automobiles most juniors just enjoyed the freedom of following their own schedule instead of the buses.

Cars! Cars! Cars of different shapes and years fill the front parking lot each day. Students who drove appreciated having any type of transportation as an alternative to riding the school bus.

Chinese fire drill? Nine friends gather in Junior Mario Burress' M.G. to socialize and listen to music. Cars not only served as a means of transportation but also as hangouts for students. The ownership of a smaller car such as an MG reflected the typical trend towards smaller, sportier ones.

In the fast lane

Strike! Every lane shook with the rattling of duckpins and the roar of bowling balls drowning out the sounds of current hits blaring from the jukebox at Willow Bowl. Herbie disregarded all this noise as he began his approach. He stalked the foul line aggressively and let the tiny ball roll: a strike once more.

Because of his consistently high scores, junior Herbie Lane achieved recognition as one of the best bowlers in the West End Men's League. He also bowled in other leagues, including the Thursday Mixed Doubles, demonstrating his love for the sport.

Herbie began bowling duckpins at the age of 4. His practice and dedication paid off as he became one of the most prominent bowlers in his age group. His average score of 133, considered an excellent average in duckpins, proved one of the area's best.

Duckpins, a more difficult game than the standard tenpin bowling, stood out as Herbie's specialty. "I like it better because it's more of a challenge," he explained. In the 1983 State Junior Duckpins Tournament, Herbie finished second.

During the spring of 1984, the Major Men's League drafted Herbie during the first round. Once he joined this league, Herbie became a professional athlete, giving up the opportunity to compete in any school sports.

The spice of life

Change: some welcomed it as progress, while others abhored the word. New circumstances brought different values and altered ways of thinking. Even in areas such as Farmville, Virginia, change affected the community; at Longwood College, students tried to understand these changes in order to challenge them.

Participants in Governor's School examined the problems and the benefits that new technology brought, and how the results touched their lives. Juniors Sarah Breitbach, Angela DeVaun and Susan James chose to study the effect of these changes on the arts. Sarah concentrated on the developing concepts of drama, while Angela and Susan found their interests related to the old and new concepts of twentieth century music.

Adding variety to the experience, the faculty sponsored two dances, a toga party and a water fight. Surprise fire drills startled the students, but provided the guys with the thrill of seeing the girls in their nightgowns.

On a more serious note, the curriculum, challenged students to deal with the revolution of inspirations. Curious students discussed the problems and advantages of progress. Recognizing the fact that society and views could change, they realized that people must not blindly follow, but question and dare to go beyond the limits which others set.

Express yourself. Through dramatic skills acquired at Governor's School, junior Sarah Breitbach practices facial gestures. She pursued her interests in the developing concepts of drama, which she practiced in forensics competitions and school plays.

Guys and Dolls. Juniors Susan James and Angela DeVaun laugh about the ratio of males to females at Governor's School. Out of approximately 200 attendants, girls numbered about 135, while the guys totaled about 65.

Horseplay

Entering the stable, the smells of leather and hay greeted April as she began her daily grooming of Zani, a white and gray Arabian horse. After gathering equipment from the barn, she began 20 minutes of work, cleaning and brushing the horse before taking him out for the afternoon's ride. April used brushes, combs, and a hoof pic to spruce up the animal's appearance.

Though junior April Yoder did not own a horse, she treated Zani and other horses she rode as her own. She became attached to the horses after devoting hours to their care and planned her activities around trips to the stables. April enjoyed feeding Zani using hay and feed of honey and molasses to keep the horse content.

At the age of eight, April began riding with friends who owned horses. Her interest increased, and she allowed time each week to ride at the Goochland Cloverun Stables.

Frequently, any length of time spent in th saddle resulted in discomfort. Sore wrist back, and ankles became a familiar occu rence because of the constant effort to mai tain good riding posture. The joy and invigor tion April experienced while riding outweigl ed any pain involved, and an afternoon o horseback helped her forget daily pressure and escape to a freer, unstructured world.

There's no place like home

Along the yellow brick road, pots of gold accentuated painted rainbows, transforming the gymnasium into the mystical land at the "End of the Rainbow." The Sophomore Class Council met after school Friday and all day Saturday to prepare for the Homecoming Dance. Sophomore David Turner contributed his artistic talent by painting the backdrop of a magical castle. By 4:00 p.m. on October 15 rows of streamers hid the ceiling and adorned the bleachers.

Relating to the theme of the dance, the float built by the Class of '86 depicted the Wizard of Oz. People disguised as the scarecrow, tin man and Dorothy rode on the truck that won first prize in the Homecoming Parade.

Cooperation among the Sophomore Clas helped them to complete tasks such as the Homecoming festivities and fund raising ac tivities. They raised more than $1500 by sellin long-sleeved Tucker tee-shirts. This enthusiasm peaked at pep rallies as the members of the class captured three spirit awards.

Countdown

Where's my other tennis shoe? Does anybody have an extra pair of socks? Do we have to dress out today? Are we playing basketball again for the millionth time? Can I borrow some deodorant? I'm next at the mirror! My hair looks awful! I need some make-up! It must be 120 degrees in here. Hey, did you hear about John and Julie? I can't wait to burn this smelly gym suit! I'm so glad I don't have to take gym next year!

After five years of taking physical education, sophomores perfected the art of dressing out. Although students often complained about the P.E. requirements, they enjoyed the class as a break from the normal classroom. "You have a good time and get physical," Taylor Farmer explained.

School policy permitted only the wearing of gym suits during class. Because of their unflattering appearance students looked forward to cold weather when they could cover the everyday attire with colorful sweatshirts and pants.

"Gym has been a time to help relieve tension through activity. It's also a good time to talk to friends," commented Alan Barr. Jeff Lockard added, "I've enjoyed the competition against classmates and learning about different sports, but I'm looking forward to not having to dress out!" "It'll be great not having to go to class all sweaty and smelly and with your hair all messed up," remarked Julie Etheridge.

Dressed out with no place to go. Although coed physical education classes exercised together the sexes separated for most sports. During this activity it seems the girls ended up on the sidelines.

Short shirted. Alterations on gym suits left less material and more muscles. Cut off shirts appeared more comfortable and easier to exercise in than the traditional style tee shirt.

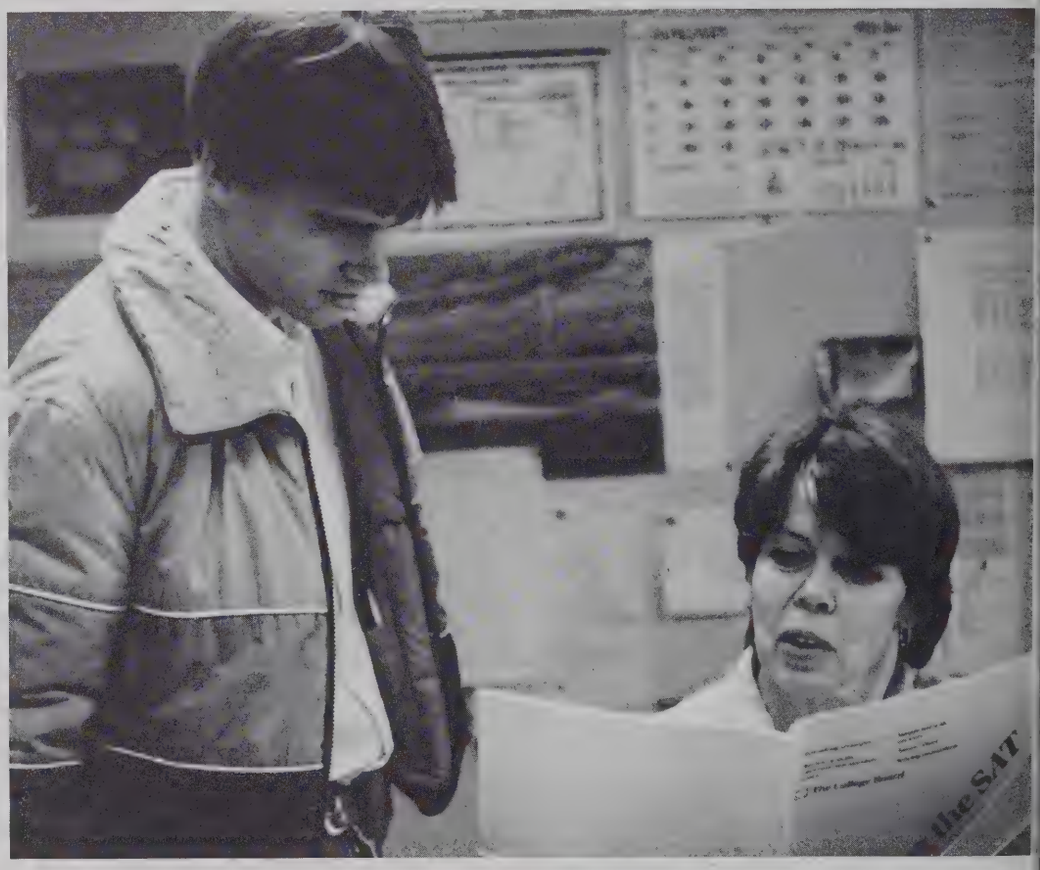
Overtime

When the final bell rang ending another school week, students' spirits lifted as they thought about weekend plans of football games and parties. However, for juniors and a few interested sophomores, one fall week proved extra long due to the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test. This test drew students back to the classroom on Saturday for a morning of analogies and math problems.

Voluntarily giving up their morning of sleep, certain sophomores faced the rigors of test taking. Fear and anticipation accompanied them as they sat down in a room full of juniors to tackle their first college board test. Before taking the PSAT's, students registered through the guidance department, submitting $7 with their applicaiton. In return, the students received a PSAT booklet with examples and questions to help them prepare for the test. These sophomores forfeited their time for the PSAT's, normally taken by juniors, to obtain additional practice in taking the standardized tests. They hoped this practice would help raise their SAT scores and therefore enhance their chances of acceptance into the college of their choice.

Mr. Curtis advised sophomores to talk with their parents and decide whether or not to take the test in their sophomore year. Mr. Curtis commented, "It's an individual's choice and should be thought about carefully." Those who took the test a year in advance agreed that doing so helped them to become more familiar with the test for their more critical junior year.

Sign me up. Questioning registration procedure, sophomore Doug Girvin and guidance secretary Mrs. Bobbie Jones review directions given in an SAT booklet. Doug and other sophomores took the PSAT's in order to achieve higher overall SAT scores.



Under pressure. Sophomores practice for the upcoming PSAT's in their honors English Class. These trials tested vocabulary, analogies and reading comprehension and helped them in overcoming their fears of the test.

Bridging the gap

For centuries rock and roll and religions never mixed; however, the Proclamations combined the two, forming a group that sang contemporary music with religious messages accompanied by an up tempo beat. Their first album "Together We Stand" included numbers written by their director, Mr. Leo Winters. Selections such as "He Cares," "The Way of the Cross," and the title cut "Together We Stand" provided appeal to Christian circles.

Established in 1971 by Zachary Piephoff, the former minister of Tuckahoe Presbyterian Church, and Mr. Winters, the band attracted high school and college age students. People who attended their performances at the church passed the word about the concerts. This grapevine sparked enough interest to allow the Proclamation to tour. They performed in churches along the east coast and planned to go as far west as Texas.

The members raised money for travel by selling refreshments at the Robins Center concession stand. Their own church also budgeted funds to ease travelling costs; however, the students paid for personal expenses. Although some performers owned instruments, the church presented a synthesizer to the group for another element of sound.

Support from the congregation and the dedication of the members contributed to the group's success. Sophomores Mike Fincham, Carolyn Jackson, Eric Jordan, and Stephen Rhudy and juniors Corrie Prince and Kim Richardson comprised 20 percent of the band. Mike remarked "I feel it is a very worthwhile group, serving a good purpose in the community." A sense of unity and accomplishment enabled these friends to keep their commitment to the group and to each other.

"Together We Stand." After they listened to the album, Kim Richardson, Mike Fincham, Eric Jordan, Carolyn Jackson, and Stephen Rhudy evaluate their performance. Although the procedure extended longer than they expected, pride in their work outweighed the time.

Color my world

Childhood artistic dreams ended with crayons and coloring books for most; however, sophomore David Turner's artistic endeavors outlived this elementary stage. After reflecting on his childhood, David concluded that his recollections dealt with a profound interest in art.

He began carrying a sketch pad everywhere in order to capture any ideas for paintings. Regardless of the form of art he chose, much of David's work contained similar themes, expressing his own ideas and personality.

Although he enjoyed working with all mediums, David confessed, "Painting is one of my favorites." Art teacher Mrs. Joan Dodd offered, "He is a 20th Century surrealist painter. He has a remarkable understanding and complete control of color theory and all art materials." Resulting from David's unique talent, he sold paintings, including one to science teacher Mr. Greg Metcalf. Also, David prepared an exhibition of his work at the school art gallery in May.

He applied his skills to other areas of interest such as music and film making. Working with Mike Vunck, David prepared an animated film to present as an exhibition at the Festival of Arts and Technology.

Spending any free time painting or sketching, David proved that dedication paid off. He obtained a collection of awards and honors, including the Cultural Arts Award, sponsored by the PTA.

Basket case

Candy-filled Easter baskets covered homeroom teachers' desks on April 13, brightening the day for the lucky recipients. Sold by the Freshman Class for $1.50, the baskets proved a novel way of fundraising. Making money remained the emphasis of the year for the class council. During February and March they sold candy bars for 50 cents and set up refreshment stands at the Homecoming and Sadie Hawkins dances as well as the Variety Show.

Officers and other interested ninth graders held class council meetings to decide what to wear at pep rallies and to organize the refreshment sales. "Turnouts for the class meeting were not high, but we worked well together," observed Vice-President Carol Ann Toney. In the spring, ten of the most active freshmen received recognition for their efforts when chosen to host the prom on May 12.

Faces in the crowd

Walking in the gym on the day of my first pep rally, I noticed hundreds of people standing up in the bleachers yelling and screaming. Eventually finding my way to the freshman section of the bleachers at the top of the stairs, I sat dumbfounded by the actions taking place.

Feeling timid and unsure of myself I asked, "Is this what high school is really like?" and then quickly responded to the commands of other classes to stand up. After the completion of the cheer, I sat down again only to realize that the other classes remained standing and expected me to do likewise.

I wondered how people could have so much energy that early in the morning as I observed all of the craziness going on down on the gym floor. I watched as cheerleaders and students chanted, cheered and danced to the peppy beat of the band. However, sometimes it became difficult to join in when I couldn't understand all of the words. I thought how silly everyone acted as I observed human trashbags, people carrying balloons and others having chicken fights.

Not understanding this kind of behavior I gazed wide-eyed at the crowds. To my amazement, Coach Shinault led the cheer "orange and blue," as the classes battled to yell the loudest. As the pep rally continued, I found myself joining in the enthusiasm and chanting with my peers. Finally, I realized that all the spirit people showed just represented pride in their school. Everything that I had thought silly before seemed a natural demonstration of school spirit.

Catching the spirit, freshmen join in the competition between the classes, hoping to win the spirit football. By the last pep rally of the season, the freshmen changed from shy bystanders into spirited participants.

To scream or not to scream? Members of the freshman class observe the opening activities of the first pep rally. Freshmen debated the question of whether they should remain seated or stand up and join in the rowdiness.

Survival of the fittest

Where am I? When does the bell ring? When does lunch start? How will I ever survive the next four years? These questions ran through the minds of freshmen as they wandered around the halls feeling lost and bewildered on their first day of high school. Faced with challenging experiences, the newcomers adjusted quickly. Big Brothers and Sisters, seniors assigned by the SCA, helped answer any questions about the school. These seniors visited freshman homerooms twice to discuss topics like clubs, grade point averages and sports.

Freshmen noticed the contrast between high school and middle school. They could eat lunch in the cafeteria of their choice instead of by homeroom. A designated smoking area for use between classes and during lunch added to the new experience. The ninth graders also took courses with older students instead of only those in their grade. Monica Davis pointed out, "I found that upperclassmen were helpful and very friendly."

The range of club activities, including class council, SCA and language clubs, attracted freshmen who wanted to get involved. However, only sophomores, juniors and seniors could participate in clubs such as SODA, Y-Tens, Hi-Y, Keyettes and Key Club. "I think we should be represented in more activities," commented freshman Bart Robertson.

Ninth graders entered high school encountering a larger campus and a greater number of older students. Privileges that they did not have in middle school proved enjoyable. Freshmen could spend study halls completing their own work instead of attending assigned activities such as intramural sports. A longer lunch period allowed them to eat where they wanted and still have time for doing homework or socializing with friends.

Going home. Lisa Glenn and Maria Klotz catch up on the latest gossip as they leave school. Like most freshmen, they had no other option than to ride the bus home, although they quickly learned of more glamorous means of transportation.

Ready, set, roll. Hymie Genderson moves into action at the Douglas Freeman pep rally as his fellow freshmen cheer him on in a contest against the other classes. Ninth graders adjusted quickly to the rowdiness of the pep rallies and joined in on the class competitions.

Footloose

Pulling on her leotards and tights, lacing her ballet or toe shoes and putting up her hair, freshman Amy Jones completed preparations for rehearsal after thorough stretching and warm-ups. This schedule became second nature to dancers, and the exercise beforehand helped prevent pulled or strained muscles. Years of dancing lessons introduced Amy to the importance of stretching before dance sessions.

At the age of 6 Amy began taking lessons at the West End Academy of Dance. After studying dance for five years, she auditioned for the Concert Ballet of Virginia. Once selected for the Concert Ballet, Amy spent weekends practicing with the group. She performed in ballets at the Empire Theatre, including "La Bayadere," "The Nutcracker" and "Sleeping Beauty." "I think the Ballet helps dancers aspire to the highest level of their ability."

When not preparing for a Concert Ballet performance, Amy spent two days a week at the West End Academy of Dance taking lessons in ballet and toe. "I feel like I eat, drink, breathe and sweat ballet, but it's worth all of the time and effort. I love it." Amy hoped to use her dancing experience to audition for the Rockettes, work as a dance instructor, or maybe even start her own dancing school.

Body talk

With the emphasis on physical fitness, students chose diverse forms of exercise to keep in shape. Freshman Sara Manwiller took up body building as her specialty at the age of 14. Sara and her father worked out 3 to 4 times a week at Nautilus. Sara felt it "keeps me in the best physical shape I can be in."

During the winter Sara travelled to Charlottesville for her first competition. There she received fourth place. Because of the muscle strain involved, body builders had to space their meets several months apart.

Her sport brought mixed reactions from those who saw it as unfeminine. But Sara pointed out that actually, "it has a lot of feminine qualities in the routine."

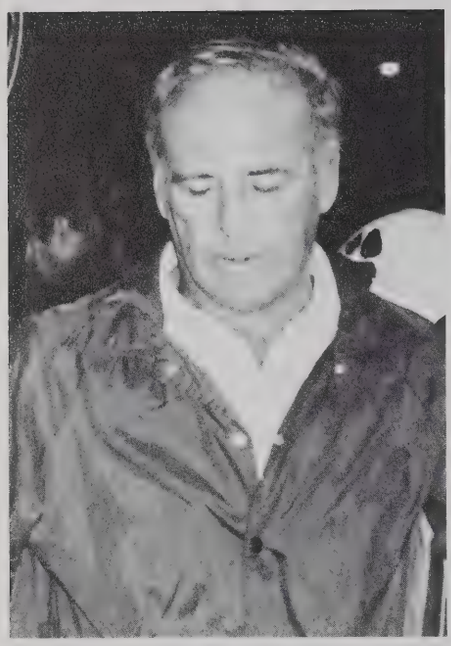
A step up

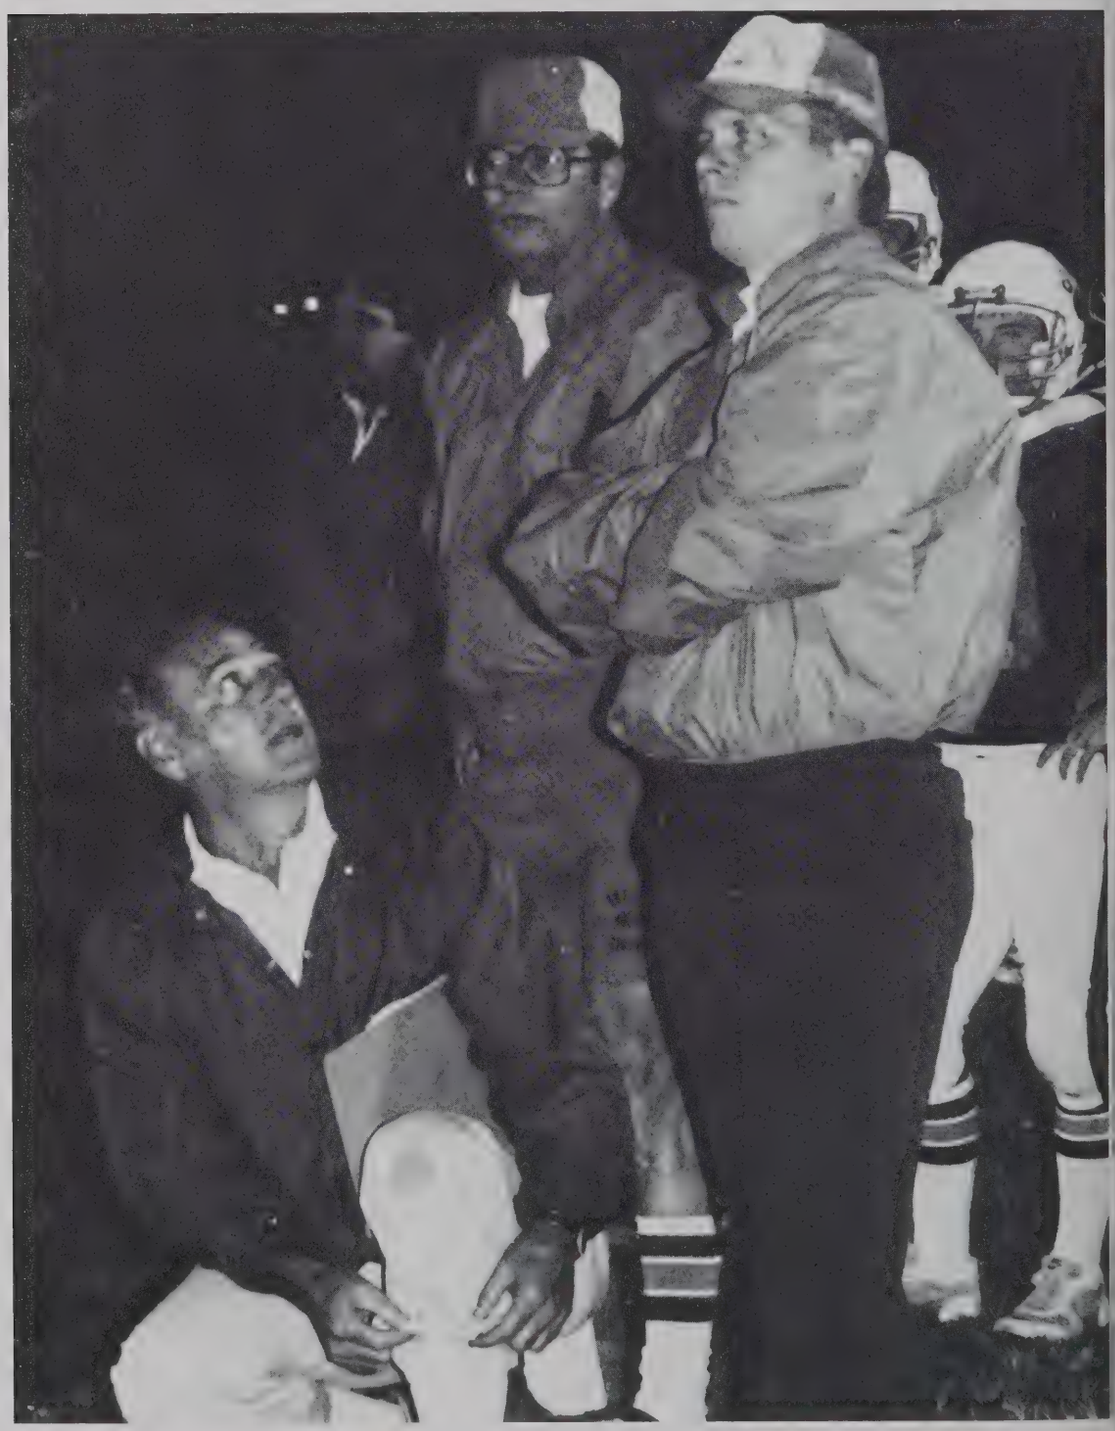
"Once a tiger, always a tiger," emphasized Head Football Coach Ed Poole during the first pep rally. This declaration of loyalty brought patriotic cheers from screaming students. Mr. Poole's connection with the school began in 1972 when he became an assistant coach for the football and track teams. His association continued through the years, including the spring of 1983 when he coached the soccer team, allowing him to gain the experience necessary to hold his current job.

In the process of learning how to coach, Mr. Poole instructed classes and teams ranging from groups of 4-year olds to 28-year olds. He taught at Bluestone High School in Skipwith, Virginia before coming to Henrico County. The age differences did not repress his coaching abilities. He explained, "There's no difference; a kid is a kid."

Coach Poole's ability with varying age groups became evident in the fall. As the physical education teacher at Crestview and Tuckahoe Elementary Schools he worked with 5-11-year olds every morning. Then he traveled to Tucker to coach the varsity football team from 3:30 until 6:30 p.m. The commuting posed few problems for Mr. Poole except when people needed to contact him before the end of the day.



What do you think? Head Coach Ed Poole asks advice from assistants Coach Pickens and Coach Shinault. Coach Poole gained experience as an assistant coach here and at Randolph Macon College.



Mixed emotions. Coach Ed Poole displays expressions reflecting the action on the field. The varsity football team ended its season 4-5-1 under his direction.

Liberty bell

When the bell sounded at the end of the school year, a stampede of beach-bound students barrelled down the halls toward freedom. But what happed to the teachers? Did they grade exams all summer? Did they create bulletin board designs? Or did they compose speeches for the first day of school? Doubtless, some took off for leisurely vacations, but others went straight to work in alternate fields.

Though work and relaxation seemed a contradiction in terms, history teacher Mr. Bert Stewart found work which relaxed him. His summer occupation, painting the outsides of homes, offered a change of pace. The job also allowed him to "pick up a couple of bucks" while benefitting from the physical activity.

Coach Stewart completed two houses during the summer. While painting, he realized the positive aspects of the teaching profession and decided that he preferred it as a livelihood. "It makes me appreciate the classroom," he emphasized.

He relished the lack of tension involved in painting. However, he recalled falling from a ladder as one disruption of his normal routine. Overall, he seemed to enjoy his three months of painting. The job provided him with the opportunity to engage in a pastime that allowed him to slow down between school sessions — the sort of break everyone sought in the summer.

After a summer of painting houses, Coach Stewart returns to the classroom with a renewed appreciation of teaching. His World History and Geography I and United States History classes provided him with a challenge for the next nine months.

Teacher's pet

Warm, cuddly, white kittens snuggled at the foot of the bed or a faithful dog beside you provided comfort, security and an excellent listener to the days' problems. Adults, as well as children, needed this kind of unconditional friendship at times. Even teachers, who according to students, had no other life than grading papers, enjoyed the attention that animals naturally offered.

Biology teacher Ms. Jane Selden, who owned fish, cats and a rabbit, began associating with animals early in her life. During her childhood, she kept pets and consequently learned to love and care for them. She proved her love of animals by taking in strays, whose food, medicine and veterinary expenses almost ran her out of house and home. However, hoping that her son would also develop a positive attitude toward pets, she made the decision to keep different types of animals in her household. "It is very important for children to be around animals so that they can express their emotions toward them," explained Ms. Selden.

Mrs. Rachel Rowland also felt sympathy for animals. Besides her job as librarian, Mrs. Rowland volunteered at the League of Animal Rights, an adoption agency for pets, in Chesterfield County. "This organization is better than the SPCA because the animals that are not claimed are not put to sleep," bragged Mrs. Rowland. She recalled an incident of two cats who made their home in an old tire and immediately became a concern of the league. While nourishing these cats, the members became attached to them and decided to keep the animals. Nearby residents donated money for the upkeep of the animals. Even the veterinarians offered a price reduction for the care given to the strays.

Ms. Ann Yeatts, another teacher, owned two cats and two dogs, but as a child she preferred horses and rabbits for pets. Ms. Yeatts, unlike Ms. Selden and Mrs. Rowland, experienced a misfortune with a stray dog that had become a nuisance. Although she got rid of this pest, Ms. Yeatts discovered another stray dog wandering around her home. She took the animal in but did not plan to keep it so she called it No Name. Much to her surprise their friendship lasted more than 13 years.

After a day of instructing classes and grading papers, teachers looked forward to going home and relaxing. Seeing their pets' friendly faces greeting them at the door made the day's events less troublesome.

Checking it out. Librarian Mrs. Rachel Rowland assists a student in finding just the right book about animals. Although one of her regular duties, she especially enjoyed helping those students who had questions about animals.

Pigging out? Ms. Ann Yeatts performs one of the tasks she most looks forward to at the end of each day, feeding the goat and horses. She traveled 20 miles to Oilville every afternoon to check on the animals' welfare.

Calling the shots

Woosh! As the player forcefully served, Mrs. Judy Harrell leaned forward in her chair and focused on the ball. Mrs. Harrell, a United States Tennis Association National Line Umpire, officiated at amateur and professional matches for the past five years. She belonged to the Greater Richmond Tennis Umpires Association which provided officials who travelled to judge tournaments such as the United States Open and Wimbledon. Because of her responsibilities as an English teacher, Mrs. Harrell could not attend these matches, but did serve as a line umpire at both the United Virginia Bank and Central Fidelity Bank International tournaments in Richmond.

Mrs. Harrell always enjoyed watching professional tennis in Richmond, but on several occasions she found herself disagreeing with some of the calls of local officials. Instead of criticizing the officials, Mrs. Harrell decided to join GRTUA and became an umpire herself. Qualifications for membership included annual attendance at a day-long school, an eye test and the officiating of a number of matches at specific levels. Mrs. Harrell met these requirements annually in order to maintain her certification.

During her years of officiating, Mrs. Harrell judged matches involving well-known people including Billy Jean King, John McEnroe, Bjorn Borg, Jimmy Conners and Martina Navratilova. In addition to working with professional players, she also acted as an umpire at local amateur competitions. Many of these competitions such as Thalhimers City Tournament were held at Byrd Park.

At one professional match during her first yea as an umpire Mrs. Harrell found herself in an un comfortable position when a young man knowr for his poor conduct participated in a double match. His conduct proved unsportsmanlike a he blamed his inability to win points on her deci sions. The young man began to serve balls ir Mrs. Harrell's direction and exhibited a definite feeling of resentment. Consequently, she volun tarily left the court but vowed that in the future she would not allow players to intimidate her.

Mrs. Harrell asserted that spectators, as well a players tried to influence judges' decisions. Oc cassionally spectators responded with whistle and boos, but officials learned to ignore these distractions. She explained, "I am always alert t what is happening on the court, but I'm human In fairness to the players I always want to b overruled if I have made an error."

Judging allowed Mrs. Harrell to become ir volved with the game of tennis at differen levels of competition, including junior and adult amateur and professional. On the other hanc Mrs. Harrell admitted that she often disliked th discomfort caused by intense concentration especially in a match lasting several hours.

Despite the headaches and stiff necks whic resulted from the tension, she realized the impo tance of her calls and tried to remain fair. Mr Harrell commented, "What better place is ther for someone to see the sport at its finest than o the court?"

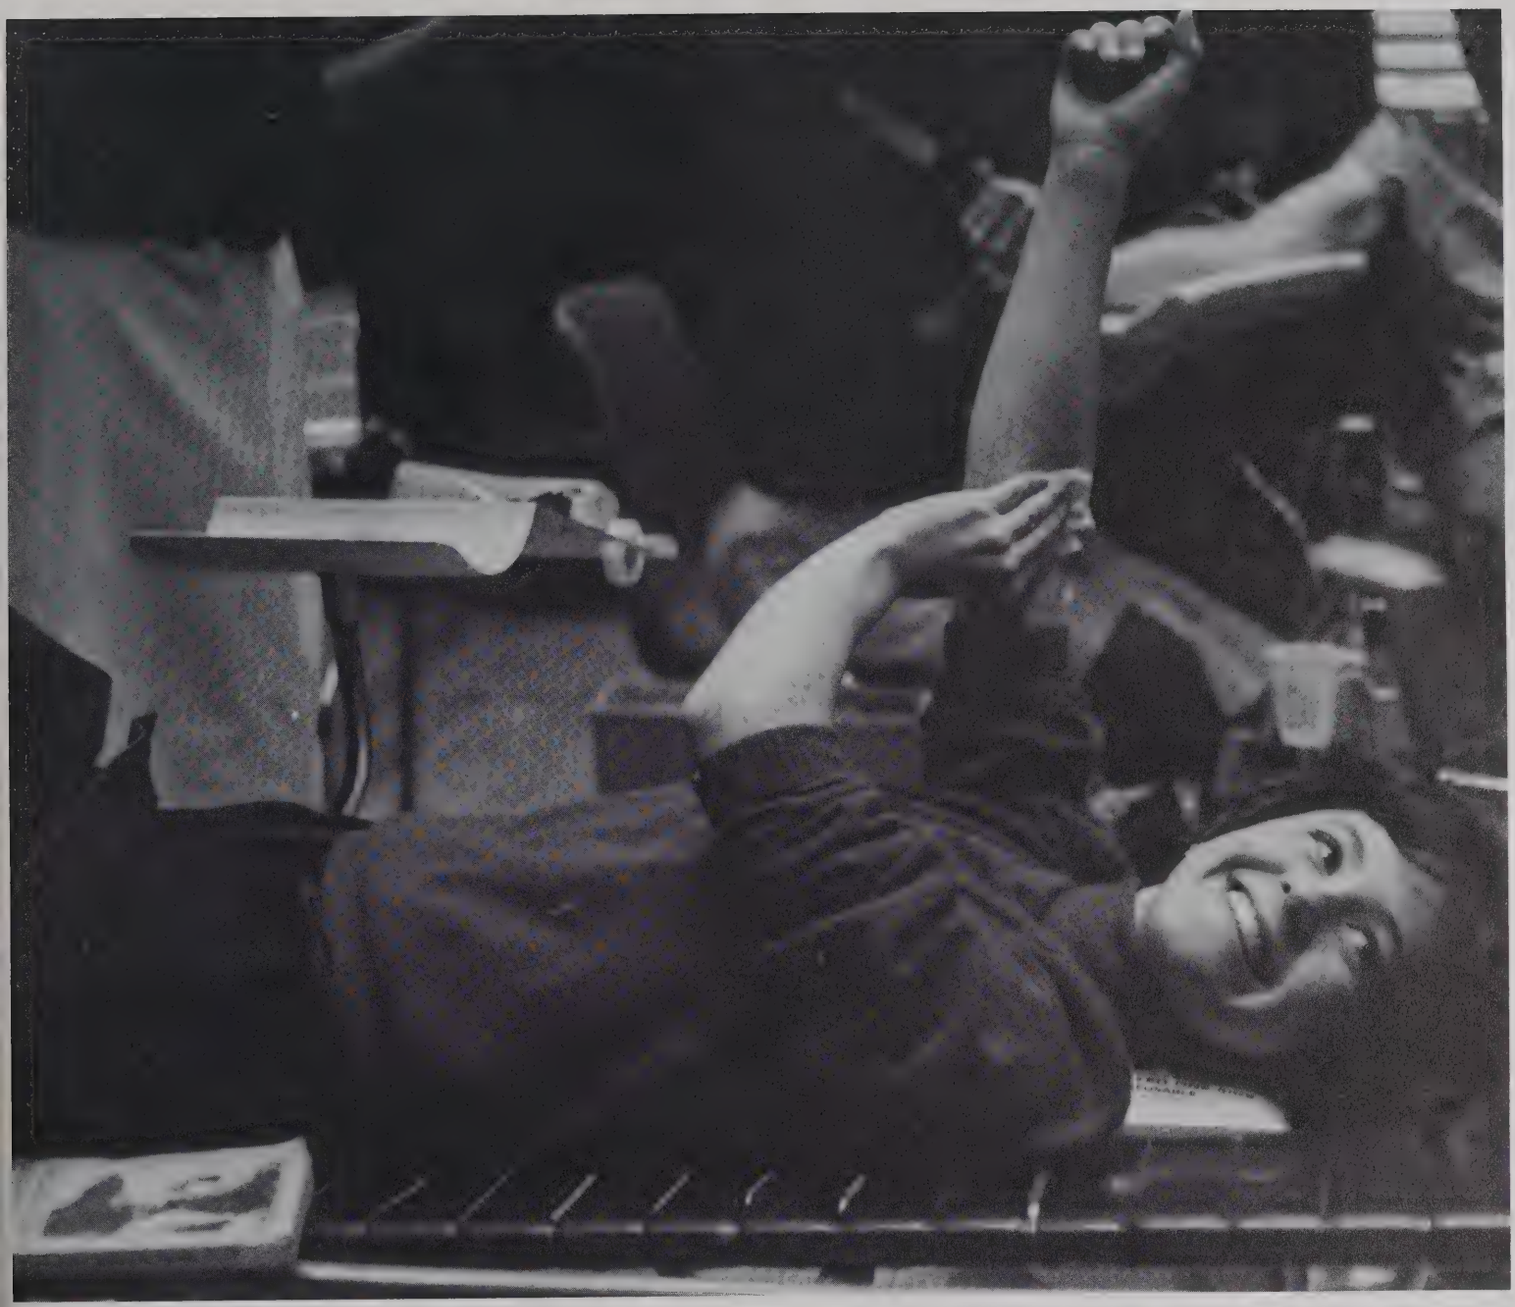
As businesses gradually altered the appearance of the once primarily suburban neighborhoods students found different ways to contribute their talents to the area. Through volunteering o working Tigers sought to become involved in their Community

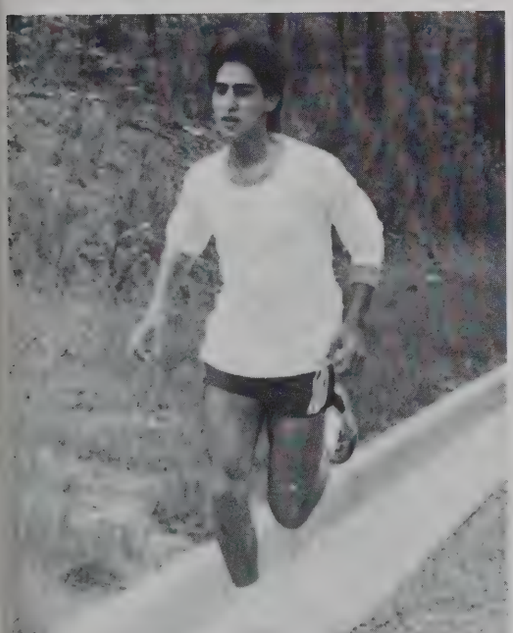
Surrounded by medical offices, banks, law firms and shoppin centers, the school's district slowly evolved into a business com munity. The switch from a predominantly residential area to a emphasis on commercial centers caused a gradual populatio shift to the western end of the county. While the chang resulted in a smaller student body, it did not deduct from pa ticipation in community activities.

The change in the make-up of the community offered greater employmer opportunities for Tigers. Jobs at such different places as fast food restaurants, reta stores or offices provided the same results — money. Ambitious teenagers foun jobs to earn extra cash to spend during the weekend. Of course, not everyon blew their paychecks; college-bound students saved money for tuition, an others helped to support their families.

When trying to find their niche in society, students became aware of their in terests in serving the community. Some volunteered at hospitals or at rescu squads and others offered their assistance at church functions. However great c small their contributions, students demonstrated an increased awareness of th world outside of their immediate community.

Welcoming a contestant as he crosses the line, spectators root for another to finish. Faculty and community members organized the Special Olympics and members of the cheerleading squads, Keyettes, and Y-Teens offered their support by volunteering as scorekeepers or cheering.





Doctor! Doctor! Flat on her back, junior Susan James smiles victoriously as if to say "I survived the S.C.A. blood drive!" Courageous Tigers donated a pint of blood to the Red Cross in order to replenish the supply. Although only a small numnber of students were eligible for the blood drive, the overwhelming response caused the nurses to continue it the next day.

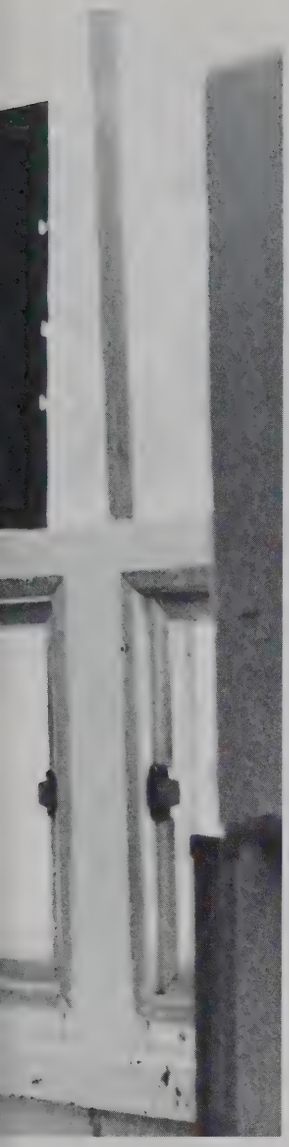
Victory! Using his athletic abilities to help others, freshman David Lever races in the National Kidney Fund Run. A $7 entry fee covered costs for prizes as well as raised money for the Kidney Foundation. Winning the 19 and under division gave David added satisfaction.

Braving the heat, junior Richard Briggs provides cool refreshments for tired swimmers. Working at Hungry Creek Pool during the summer enabled Richard to relax with friends while earning money.

Don't blink. Applying wax to a customer's eyebrows, junior Lisa Mathews displays her cosmetic skills. Working at I-Natural Cosmetics offered Lisa an opportunity to improve the techniques which she learned in her vocational cosmetology class.

One slice or two? Serving pizza at the Orange Bowl provides junior Taylor Justis with a means of earning a steady wage. When working on weekends Taylor met with friends after work and visited the neighboring theatres and restaurants around Regency Square.

Men at work



Who's next? Senior Felicia Pollard rings up a sale after serving ice cream to a customer. As temperatures rose, business increased at Baskin-Robbins Ice cream Parlour, keeping employees busy.

Assisting at the cash register, Tracie Longerbeam, a junior, greets patrons dining at Mr. Dunderbak's. By working at the Regency Square restaurant and deli, Tracie relaxed in the casual mall atmosphere and socialized with friends while on break.

All of the phones lit up instantaneously while the Xerox machine spat out 12,000 copies in triplicate. Punching buttons wouldn't stop the phone from ringing, nor shut off the copier. The day should have ended hours ago when the coffee maker blew up, or when the district manager caught his tie in the typewriter, but it seemed like this day had barely begun. In spite of the headaches from a hectic job, the world of work managed to lure students into its clutches. The students discovered their need of money and turned to the job market. While the majority of job seekers applied at fast food restaurants or shops in a mall, a few found jobs in areas that they hoped to pursue in the future.

Senior Rhonda Bullock accepted a job at National Card Control Incorporated in Ashland. Although she had to travel 40 miles each day, she enjoyed her work and found it worth the drive. Her duties included filing reports, sorting mail and completing forms for customers with lost or stolen credit cards. "This can be really boring," she admitted, "but when the new computer system is installed, there will be alot of challenges." Rhonda's experiences in data processing at the Hermitage Vocational Center provided the necessary experience for this job.

Kathy Walker, also a senior, found employment helping others at University Park Nursing Home. Her work consisted of serving dinner, removing the trays and spending time with the residents. "I just love talking to the elderly folks," Kathy stated. "It gives me such a good feeling because they seldom see anyone but the other residents." Kathy managed to work 36 hours each week and keep up with her school activities. The extra pressure from working while going to school allowed less time for extra-curricular activities. Kathy felt that the pleasure she received from her work outweighed any difficulties.

Robin Crowder worked at the patient pharmacy in Henrico Doctor's Hospital. Robin handled accounting and charges at the pharmacy and fixed codes for prescriptions. This job required her to memorize all of the generic names and codes of the medications. In addition, Robin worked full time during the summer at the Chestnut Oaks Recreational Center as a life guard. She found that she liked this job the most as she always found tasks to occupy her time around the pool.

Although working while going to school proved trying at times, students enjoyed their jobs and the feeling of accomplishment that accompanied them. They pursued occupations which interested them, and some helped others through their efforts.

Man's best friend. Junior Kelly Shea relaxes with her two stuffed animals. She won the creatures playing games at the State Fair.

Is my hat straight? Drum Major Eric Thome adjusts his hat in preparation for the band's performance at the Virginia State Fair Band Competition.

One more time. The colorguard practices their part in the halftime show once more before entering the field for competition.

Step right up

Enthusiastic crowds flowed through the gates of the Virginia State Fair, September 22 through October 3 to find thrilling rides, challenging games and interesting exhibits. Shrieks of laughter and excitement filled the air as children of all ages explored the park's attractions. A new entrance fee of $5.95 entitled adventuresome people to wander through the park, experience all of the rides and view the exhibits.

Rides such as the Zipper and the Pirate excited the curious spectators as well as the riders. Although the lines for such attractions seemed endless, people continued to wait. Barkers coaxed the passersby into playing the games of chance offered, and then awarded winners with stuffed animals and other smaller rewards.

Special events also sparked interest among the fair's visitors. The State Fair Band Competition appealed to the crowd as high school bands from throughout the state, including the J. R. Tucker Marching Band, competed in three divisions, depending on the band size. The sponsor, Virginia Commonwealth University, offered prizes to the winner in each category, including a three-foot high statuette for the grand trophy recipient.

While bands competed outside in the Grand Stand, spectators found exhibits inside the buildings. The one honoring Virginia's new slogan, "We Have It Made In Virginia," displayed state-manufactured products. A giant tent housed types of animals where children received the opportunity to pet and observe animals ranging from chickens to horse.

To capture the attention of all music lovers, radio station WRVQ-94 sponsored the time machine. This attraction delighted young and old as it recapped movies and musical trends of the past. Q-94 also presented a giant heluim balloon gorilla, the symbol of their morning show, the Q-Zoo.

According to the Richmond Times Dispatch, about one-fourth of the people attending the fair came from out of town. Some of these visitors made their temporary homes at the trailer park located on the fair grounds. Despite the crowds, the fair did not take in the same amount of money as in past years. Fair officials attributed this decrease to the new admission policy of one ticket for all attractions.

We're number one! Members of the drum line demonstrate their pride in themselves at the end of the song "Moonside March." The band practiced each morning before their trip to the State Fair Competition.

Computer whizzes at work! Students enrolled in computer classes face challenging games and programs. Through computer programming they acquired skills which assisted them in other subject areas.

Two heads are better than one. Senior Lee Rohn offers advice and encouragement to German Foreign exchange student, Marco Piekert. Marco's studies on the universal and educational computer increased his command of the English language.

Helping mom with her homework. Junior Trevor Burroughs attempts to show her how to run simple programs. They enjoyed using their home computer to practice the skills that Mrs. Burroughs learned in her computer class.

Billboard advertisements lure consumers to try products through campaigns such as the one sponsored by the makers of Apple Computer. After three weeks of wondering "Where's Lisa," drivers on Broad Street discovered her identity.

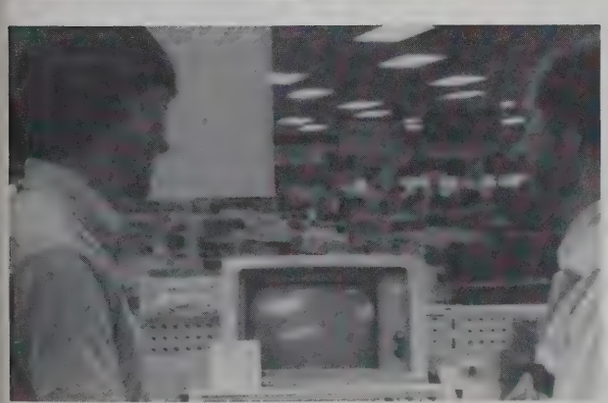
Who's Lisa?

Curious motorists found themselves faced with the dilemma of the whereabouts of the mysterious Lisa that flashed across billboards lining Broad Street. Three weeks later Data Base Corporation, one of the companies springing up in the area, revealed her true identity, a computer. This sales campaign demonstrated the human qualities given to computers as they became an influential force in everyday life. Time magazine recognized the trend toward the pushbutton world by naming the computer Man of the Year in 1982. Word processors simplified business transactions on the national level as well as locally by saving time, energy and money for people ranging from corporation presidents to students of all ages.

Tigers took advantage of the uses of the terminals both on and off campus. At home, computer buffs enjoyed the challenge of playing games such as Pac-Man, Tic-Tac-Toe and Mastermind on their video screens. On the more intellectual side students solved puzzles and created programs. Frustration overcame students as they tried to analyze different programs. The business, math and science departments included the computer in their curriculum, using the BASIC computer language to reinforce their subject matter. The vocational technical center offered more advanced courses in programming.

Even the Forensics team jumped on the band wagon by sponsoring a Computer Dating Service. A month after completing questionnaires, anxious teenagers bought the results that showed their ten most compatible individuals at school.

The entertainment world reflected on the positive and negative effects of the computer age. In the television series The Knight Rider, a computerized car aided the hero in solving mysteries. However, in the movie War Games, a computer whiz discovered and tapped into a government secret code that posed a threat to national security. Despite negative reactions, the electronic age continued to expand into all areas of work and play, raising questions about the extent of American dependence on a machine.



Modern technology helps English teacher Mrs. Judy Harrell in the age old task of making up tests. Although confessing her ignorance of the complex aspects of computer work, she enjoyed having a home model with a built printer.

Senior Kenny Giles listens attentively to a pharmacist's explanation of Safe Check at Standard Drug. This new computerized program provided customers' medical records at the touch of a button.

Stretch out. Sophomore Juli Norris practices her aerobics at home to stay in shape between classes. Juli and her mother took a class from Aerobics Plus every Tuesday and Thursday night.

Speak easy. Keeping up with school work and Dale Carnegie assignments keeps Pat Perry busy. She attended the Dale Carnegie School one night a week.

Reach. Working to maintain her number one position on the Girls' Tennis Team, senior Peggy Brown takes tennis lessons yearround.

Summer blonde. Passing his senior lifesaving course allowed Mark Cunningham to serve as a lifeguard. Getting a tan and meeting girls enhanced his responsibility-filled summer job.

A class act

At the end of the day, while many hurried home, grabbed a coke, and just relaxed, others went from one classroom to another. Taking an extra class involved additional time for practice or studying, but did allow students to achieve more for themselves.

Seniors Diane Eades and Mary Beth Lynch both attended Water Safety Instructor classes through a program sponsored by J. Sargeant Reynolds. These classes, held on Tuesdays and Wednesdays from 6 to 10 p.m., enabled them to qualify to teach any class up to and including lifesaving. Diane expressed, "Going to school and going to classes at night made it tough to get things done, including homework. It was hectic, but worth it."

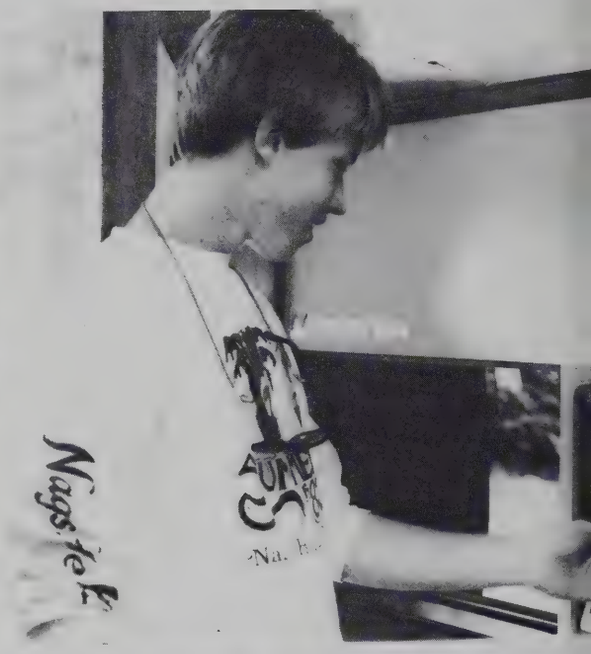
Also attending classes to enhance her athletic ability, senior Peggy Brown practiced tennis after school at St. Christopher's School. The sessions, held two nights a week, continued from October to March. Local pros Tom Hood and John Depew also worked with the students. "They really pushed us hard," commented Peggy. "Hopefully the hard work will show when it comes to playing in tournaments."

Out of the athletic field and in to a more business-like setting, junior Pat Perry enrolled in a Dale Carnegie course. This class consisted of 40 Junior Achievement students, chosen by their sponsor to take the course. Held at the Dale Carnegie School on Mayland Drive every Thursday night, this class taught public speaking techniques for the businss world. Those who showed an extreme interest in the course gained the chance to become graduate assistants at the school.

One at a time. Senior Kenny Hyman pours punch at the reception honoring newly inducted members of Mu Alpha Thera. Symbolizing the recent emphasis on better education, this club honored students who excelled in mathematics. After the Education Commission's report showed that the quality of American education fell short of other world powers, Governor Chuck Robb increased graduation requirements in the areas of math and science.

Cashing in. Taking advantage of one of the 157 cash flow machines, sophomore Jeff Lockard withdraws money from his checking account. Customers found it convenient to be able to make transactions 24 hours a day.

Last minute jitters. Chatting with friends, seniors dressed in their caps and gowns prepare for graduation exercises. After graduating, the class left the security of high school and faced a competitive job market. Fortunately, the nation began to recover from its economic depression causing a decline in unemployment.



PRINT. Keeping an eye on the screen, junior Lars Godzik types his program on the keyboard. With the rise of the Computer Age, enrollment in related courses increased as students became interested in programming or operating as a possible career.

Sit down and stay awhile. Avoiding possible eye damage caused by looking directly at the sun, seniors Deron Noel, Goerge Arhas, Doug Wright and Penny Dorset gather around a TV set to watch the coverage of the annular solar eclipse. Because of its rarity, this event will not occur again until the year 2090.

Merge Right

With the fast-paced lifestyles of today's workers and the increase in two-income families, two banks, First and Merchants and Virginia National Bank merged to meet the demands of a changing society. As a combination of two of the largest banks in Virginia, Sovran Bank ranked in the top 40 banks in the nation according to depository assets. Because of its size, Sovran offered customers more lending power, resources and locations than any bank in the state. In fact, junior Kathy Winn observed, "There seems to be a Sovran Bank on almost every streetcorner."

Just as the banks merged to benefit the consumer, Atlantic Telephone and Telegraph Company split up for the good of the public. AT&T controlled the telephone companies, research centers and all of the manufacturing of equipment, limiting the consumers freedom. After a long controversy, on January 1 AT&T technologies enacted its agreement to give up the telephone companies. Whereas the old AT&T could afford to charge less because of its monopoly, the small, individual companies could not continue this practice and raised monthly rates. Also, the consumers faced a decision about whether to continue renting their phone or to buy a phone from one of many manufacturers.

Throughout the year, presidential hopefuls travelled around the country making speeches for the election primaries. Television stations and newspapers reported results of caucuses and polls on a daily basis. Five of the Democratic candidates dropped out of the running, leaving Gary Hart, Jesse Jackson and former Vice President Walter Mondale to vie for the nomination.

Traditionally, the presidential elections related to the Olympic games by occurring in the same year. However, in recent years, government issues largely influenced the Olympics. On May 8, the Soviet Union, followed later by other Communist nations, announced that they would not participate in the summer games in Los Angeles. Again, politics affected the Olympics, which usually symbolized a friendship between nations.

The Soviet Union stirred up fears and suspicions in September when Russian officers gave orders to shoot down a Korean 747 passenger jet flying in Soviet airspace. They explained this act as an unfortunate and tragic mistake. However, Americans still remained concerned about a future relationship with the Soviet Union. Later in the year, similar feelings surfaced due to the death of Soviet Leader Yuri Andropov.

It's for you. During a break at Lindsey Ward, workers pose with different models of telephones. Lindsey Ward also carried electronic and stereo equipment plus televisions.

Can we talk? Borrowing a line from Joan Rivers, senior Marci Levet once again spends her time on the phone with Lisa Ettinger discussing college plans and the yearbook.

Chit chat. Junior Kim Wells enjoys nice weather while using one of the new portable phones. They allowed the user to participate in idle chatter anywhere.

Phone home. Junior Angela DeVaun takes advantage of the pay phones to make a call home to okay after-school plans.

Keep in touch

Watching a grandmother in a floral print dress crying all over her apron at the end of a phone call brought even more tears from the viewers when the background filled with a chorus of "Reach out and touch someone." These corny commericals for AT&T needed little imagination or selling power because after all, AT&T stood alone, the big one and only.

However, the United States Supreme Court declared AT&T a monopoly and ordered a breakup into seven additional companies. Based on the principle of competition, the advantage would be a rate reduction in the long run. Companies such as Sprint and MCI began their race with humorous commercials of Joan Rivers giving the axe to AT&T. These commercials drew blood at times, but hey, everything is fair in love and war (and with Joan Rivers).

Another change brought about a cynical shrug from many. After all, scrounging up 20¢ to make a call, walking a block to find a pay phone only to discover it cost a quarter could make Little Mary Sunshine a cynic. At least now, you avoid swearing about not getting your 5¢ back when you put in a quarter.

The overall increase in phone bills should not induce anxiety in students. Why should we worry when our parents pay? The time has come to be thankful that you never got the telephone you begged, screamed, cried and threatened for. Now you can buy a new wardrobe or a bike and use your parent's phone all for the price you would pay for your own telephone.

The Jarvis touch. Senior Adele Neighman concentrates on the right button to choose. This multi-buttoned phone from "the other phone company" provided the school with an alternative to renting phones from AT&T.

Chain gang. Junior and senior class team members line up in the correct position to begin the human chain race. Senior Field Night took place during the afternoon to try to get a larger turnout; however, due to rain fewer people attended.

Look at those legs. Male chorus members in drag perform the song Dream Girls during the Spring Choral Concert. The guys appeared on the stage following the Novettes in a type of mock encore.

Jiffy-pop. In order to satisfy an assignment for Ms. Jane Selden's Third Semester Biology class, junior Jill Brown dresses as a piece of popcorn. In addition to Ms. Selden's requirement, the Pep Club sponsored a costume contest to promote enthusiasm for Halloween.

Sun in. Lining the pavement in front of Building 10 with towels and sand chairs, seniors spend lunch time waiting for the sun to come out on a cloudy Beach Day. Longing for the end of school and a trip to the beach, the class showed the most spirit on the final day of Senior Week.

Small talk

Thinking big proved the best way to overcome any disadvantages that might occur because of the small school size. Students did not concentrate on only numbers the way school board officials might. Instead, they focused their thoughts on achieving.

Due to the overall excellence of the total school program Tucker was named one of the top seven high schools in Virginia. Academically, Tigers received higher standardized test scores than the national average. Striving for continued educational excellence, 80 percent of the senior class planned to move on to some form of high edcuation after graduation.

School did not only consist of classroom learning as students gained practical knowledge through participation in athletics. School enrollment failed to provide an abundance of prospective members from which to choose. However, coaches managed to put together competitive teams. In fact, seven teams sent representatives to state competitions, the highest athletic accomplishment.

Whether in the classroom or in sports, students and teachers alike realized the importance of measuring success not merely in numbers but in individual improvement and achievement. Overlooking the reality of reduced school size, Tigers made big accomplishments, not just small talk.

Catch some z's. Freshman Junior Strong retreats to the clinic to take a quick nap. Besides serving as a hideout the clinic provided a place for those who really needed treatment.

Blind man's bluff. Senior Allen Hall imitates a blind tuba player in order to raise pocket money. While Allen did this as a joke some people actually donated money to his cause.

Travelling band. The McClain Family Band entertains the student body in the gym. The group played bluegrass music for schools around the country.

Etcetera

It was already 6:35, and I was late for Variety Show rehearsal. Since I hadn't eaten anything since 12:25 I pulled into the Wendy's drive-thru and was greeted by at least six "Where's the Beef?" posters. I decided against a hamburger and ordered a chicken sandwich instead. After all they don't use fused processed chicken at Wendy's.

When I finally rolled into the school parking lot, I was 20 minutes late. To make matters worse the tenth Michael Jackson song of the day was on the radio. I ran into the auditorium just in time to be asked if there was too much caffeine in my coffee. What coffee? Then, Tommy Jackson and company ran out on the stage dressed as flashers and acted accordingly. After such a shock, I went home to rest up for the next school day.

School began the next day with the morning announcements informing me of three meetings I needed to attend. Was that possible since I had to do that all in the last 15 minutes of lunch? I wondered where they were going to hold my class council meeting since Building 10 had been officially closed for lunch due to food fights. However, what I remember the most about that particular morning was Mr. Caldwell's famous announcement about the grade scan sheets.

All of my worries about meetings at lunch did not matter as I had to make a phone call which used up all of my 15 minute meeting time. I was shocked to see that pay phone prices had gone from 20 to 25 cents.

Finally, seventh period rolled around, and I wandered into the yearbook room only to have another shock. The typing room and desk had been cleaned. The floor especially looked nice, after all — the floor is not a garbage can. My mood quickly shattered when freshman Kevin Navin broke a $15 ruler.

The events of these fall days stand out in my mind but there are other events worth recording. I remember the football game that was showered by the automatic sprinklers. Speaking of football, the team won against Highland Springs for the first time in 13 years. Another first occurred in February when a disc jockey provided the music at the Sadie Hawkins. How can I forget the tradition started by the Freshman Class of sending Easter Baskets? In addition, the first annual Drop Everything and Be Nice To Your Teacher Day was held.

Besides the many firsts, the year stood out for other reasons. The Class of '84 was the smallest graduating class in school history. Harder graduation requirements were discussed. Mr. Ralph Crockett, Mrs. Mary Hayes and Mrs. Fran Purdum announced their retirement. The circus came to school. And, the best entertainment of the year visited — the McClain Family Band. Did they really pay those people?

On a larger scale, Americans spent hours in front of the television watching the Olympics. Did you know that Pop Tarts were the official toaster pastry of the Olympics?

Finally, did you know that Q-94 played Richmond Radar Weather exactly every half hour? Don't forget to surf a Wave-Riding Vehicle. By the way, Mrs. Poates, Marci and Adele never got stopped by the police in your car.

Can he breathe? Making his way through mounds of whipped creme, freshman Hymie Genderson hunts for M&M's during Senior Field Day. The Freshman Class received the most points, winning the overall competition.

With this ring. As Marryin' Sam, Mr. Carter performs a temporary marriage. It became tradition to have Mr. Carter play this part at Sadie Hawkins dances.

Let's dance. Mr. Carter moves to the music of the Air Force Rock Band with 1983 graduate Susan Lovelace.

Ho ho ho. Mr. Carter heads towards the stage to cor "Sleigh Ride." Each year the Music Department in Mr. Carter to play Santa in the holiday concert.

Mr. Herbert F. Carter, Jr. Sept. 16, 1925-Sept. 19, 1983

Mr. Carter taught at Tucker for 19 years. He was more than just a History and Government teacher. He contributed his enthusiasm to activities all around the school and will be missed by all who knew him.

Mr. Santa. During the holiday concert of 1982, Novettes gather around Santa Claus, Mr. Carter, singing popular Christmas songs.

Memorial garden. To remind future classes of Mr. Carter's contributions to the school, Mrs. Fran Purdum's Science Seminar classes and the Science Ecology Club designed a garden in his name.
